some limits to the devices which the Court ought to countenance in order to defeat the fiscal intentions of the Legislature. In his judgment, the proposals overstepped those limits. His lordship (making a new addition to tax language) said he was not persuaded that the application represented more than a 'cheap' exercise in tax avoidance. This, as against the legitimate avoidance of taxation, ought not to be sanctioned. He took the view that the Weston family had gone to Jersey only to avoid tax and he was not satisfied that they had gone to live there permanently. He expressed the hope that the applicant would appeal to the Court of Appeal so that guidance could be given to judges.

It would, we think, also be interesting to have that Court's views on the contradistinction between 'cheap' and 'legitimate'.

Institute's November Final Examinations

OF the 3,101 candidates who sat for Part I of the November Final examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, 1,573

(51 per cent) passed, and 1,528 failed.

The First Place in Order of Merit and the Robert Fletcher Prize were awarded jointly to Mr R. H. Westcott, of South Molton, and Mr J. M. G. Yates, of Kingston upon Thames. Mr Westcott was also awarded the Roger N. Carter Prize and the Deloitte-Plender Prizes for the papers on Advanced Accounting I and Taxation I. Also awarded to Mr Yates were the Deloitte-Plender Prizes for the papers on English Law I and II. Third Place in Order of Merit and the Walter Knox Scholarship were won by Mr H. C. Moore, of Ipswich.

In Part II there were 2,019 candidates of whom 1,018 (50 per cent) passed and 1,001 failed. First Place in Order of Merit and the W. B. Peat Medal and Prize were awarded to Mr N. D. Brown, of London. Second Place in Order of Merit and the Charles M. Strachan Prize were won by Mr M. Lamaison, of Epsom, and Third Place in Order of Merit and the Tom Walton Prize, were awarded to Mr C. J. R. Carter, of Stoke Newington.

A full list of successful candidates and a summary of the complete results are published as a supplement to this issue.

Town Centre Properties Investigation

In 1965 the Board of Trade appointed two Inspectors to investigate jointly into the affairs of Town Centre Properties Ltd and Star Explorations Ltd. They were Mr M. M. Wheeler, Q.C., and Mr C. E. M. Hardie, C.B.E., F.C.A., and their report was published last week. It tells a sorry but familiar story of a wealthy company being acquired out of finance which appeared to come from the company itself, with the subsequent failure of the company.

The Inspectors were hampered by the fact that the two individuals who probably knew most about what went on were not available, both having taken up residence outside the United Kingdom. It seems that neither of them was ever a titular director of the company, although one was described as 'financial consultant' to three of the companies concerned. The Inspectors say rightly that their report will throw some light on the methods by which men like these two individuals are able to manipulate the affairs of hitherto respectable companies. They say also that the report illustrates the dangers which are inherent in a situation in which control of a company can change overnight, often to the detriment of minority shareholders. Thirdly, they say, the report shows a need for strengthening the accountability of those who, although in fact in control of a company, seek to minimize their legal responsibilities by avoiding becoming directors themselves, but who attain a similar result by the appointment of nominees who can be relied upon to do as they are told without question, and, in all too many cases, with a complete ignorance of, or disregard for, the responsibilities which acceptance of the office of director should carry with it.

The report points out that the definition of 'director' in section 455 (1) of the Companies Act 1948, states that it 'includes any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called'. At first sight, this definition seems very wide. However, the word is expressly given a wider meaning for some purposes, such as in section 415 for the special purposes of Part X of the Act, where it includes 'any person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act'.

The Inspectors say they are aware of at least one reported decision where the Court has held that for the purposes of section 455 (1) a controlling shareholder of a company incorporated inside Great Britain (which in fact dictated the policy to be adopted by the directors) without himself holding any official position in the company, was not a director. The Inspectors think this loophole should be closed. We would add that the group of companies is a very common phenomenon but it does not seem to be suggested anywhere that the parent company, which in fact dictates policy, is a director of its subsidiaries.

Budget Advice – 'Encourage Private Saving'

THE 1968 memorandum of the Wider Share Ownership Council to the Chancellor of the Exchequer was prepared by Professor G. S. A. Wheatcroft, and submitted by the Chairman of the Council, Lord Shawcross. It is to be hoped that the Chancellor will give the memorandum close study, although the probabilities are that he has already made up his mind – and on advice which does not receive much publicity.

The Council says it presumes that the object of the threatened increase in taxation is to cut down consumption in the private sector. It points out that this can equally be achieved by private saving, which is a better way. However, taxpayers have to be convinced that saving is not only good for the country but also good for themselves. What they want is some indication of the Government's intention to encourage savings. Therefore the Council makes some specific recommendations, including in particular 'thrift plans' similar to those in operation in the United States.

Under these plans, run by enterprises for their employees, the employees make regular subscriptions for investment in approved media plus bonuses from the company in the form of its own shares. In the United Kingdom, both the subscriptions and the bonuses are taxed on the employee as income; in the United States the employee pays only capital gains tax, and even then only when he withdraws the savings. The Council also suggests that more investment income of persons over 65 should be treated as earned income by extending the total income limit for this relief. It is also suggested that, say, the first £25 or £50 of a person's investment income should be exempted, with a similar limit (rather higher) for capital gains.

Executive Salaries

ARECENT survey among 350 companies – ranging in size from 250 employees to over 10,000 – examines the relative position of the main fifteen executive posts in industry below board level. The five top jobs, according to the survey prepared by Associated Industrial Consultants, are general manager, sales manager, works manager, chief accountant and head of design or research. In each of these categories there are executives in the £5,000 p.a. bracket, but there are more of this grade among the general managers. It is the above executives, together with the company secretary and the buyer, who are the most likely to be rewarded with a directorship.

The chief accountant, as reflected in the composition of the survey sample, is aged 43 and almost certain to be qualified. He will have held his present position for more than five years and earns about £3,600. About one-third of their number are directors, in which case they earn over £5,000. About half of them have sole use of a car and rather less than half of the sample of such accountants are rewarded with a bonus of 11 per cent.

According to the survey, executives tend to stay longest with the medium-sized company, i.e. employing between 1,000 and 2,000. The larger companies have a quicker turnover of executives. Even so, the overall job tenure remains at rather over five years, although the proportion of the latest sample holding the same job for the last four years has fallen to just under 48 per cent. As far as job stability is concerned, those who tend to stay longest in their jobs in the older age groups are the cost accountants and company secretaries.

In an analysis of salaries paid to the chief executives, the survey finds that 48 per cent of general managers earn over £5,000, compared with almost 25 per cent of sales managers and 20 per cent of works managers. Among the chief accountants, about 19 per cent earn in excess of that figure.

Property Market in 1967

N their property market review for 1967, Messrs Chamberlain & Willows, of London, state that one of the principal features was the success achieved in the letting of newly-built factories and warehouses in industrial estates. In a similar review, Messrs Allsop & Co and H. E. Foster & Cranfield, London, confirm that the demand for modern factories has been high, particularly where premises had adequate loading and parking facilities.

London and the south-east, say Chamberlain &

Willows, still represents the most important trading area, and industrial sites in Surrey and Hertfordshire are popular with industrialists. Higher rents have been obtained for good accommodation in new office blocks in London's West End and the City, but outside these areas a large amount of office accommodation is vacant; in Croydon there is probably over one million square feet available at rents from 20s to 32s 6d a square foot.

Also referring to office accommodation, the Allsop review states that in Central London a considerable amount of new premises were let at higher rentals, older properties tending to remain on the market longer unless they have been well modernized. Almost all new large buildings in the 'banking centre' of the City were let quickly at high rentals of up to £6 per square foot.

In Birmingham the trend has been for companies to move away from the city centre to areas such as Edgbaston; rentals of new buildings in the centre range from 15s to 25s per square foot, and in Edgbaston from 20s to 22s 6d. In Bristol there are now only a few new buildings unlet and rentals have risen slightly from 16s to 17s. Although in Leeds a number of large offices are being constructed, demand has been slow, and many new buildings are being let in small units; rental values have remained static at about 20s. The demand in Liverpool has been good in the city centre and rentals have climbed to 20s. Office development has only recently started in Newcastle and local companies are only slowly beginning to consider new accommodation. Rentals have risen - ranging from 17s to 19s per square foot – and demand is increasing.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

AFRIEND of mine is chief accountant of a big investment company. He is a stout, cheerful character whose weight is increasing to an extent which will soon cause his doctor to give him the choice between fasting and funeral, and his wallet has grown even fatter over the years.

Personally, I am conscious of a perceptible but unworthy feeling of jealousy when I meet him. It's not so much that he's done so well for himself – the best of luck to him for that – as that he won't share his know-how. He has huge graphs on one wall of his office marked 'Unit trusts' or 'Equities' or 'Gilts', each with multi-coloured lines snaking sneakily upwards. Indices, he murmurs profoundly, options, conversion factors net yield-wise to redemption.

'We got in just before the take-over was announced', he smiled in response to my recent inquiry. 'It was sticking out if you just studied the two balance sheets; nearly fourteen shillings rise per share . . . mean to say you hadn't spotted it, old boy?'

I hadn't, of course. In the distributive business one doesn't seem to hear the whispers that tend to circulate in exalted financial circles; and I haven't the time to follow Stock Exchange reports as closely as I probably should. 'Not me', I rejoined with false heartiness, 'but have you anything else to recommend? Anything good you've been keeping your eye on lately?'

'We-ell', he hesitated, 'there's a hint of a possible merger, but...no, I'm not justified in mentioning it. It's probably quite untrue and you could lose your shirt...no, better not'.

Pressed further, he declined with a big grin. It's like horses or roulette, he affirms. Stick a pin in.

Follow your fancy. It's anybody's guess. He couldn't be responsible for leading somebody astray.

I can look after myself, I answered sharply, but to no avail. I remember indignantly a long-gone day when Ned, in our student days, was invited to a hush-hush night-club where roulette was played, and he asked me to go along for moral support. It was a case of the blind leading the blind, but we donned sophisticated expressions and went in boldly. Toujours l'audace.

There were black velvet curtains beyond the discreet basement entrance, then a glare of lights around the crowded tables. My first shock, at seeing the 'minimum stake' figures, was nothing to the shock of seeing Ned promptly downing two huge glasses of whisky supplied free by a ravishing waitress. Lucky in love, he said hopefully, and bought his chips with nonchalant ease.

As an actuarial science student I was less eager. If reds and blacks paid evens, I argued mentally, then the yellows loaded the odds in the croupier's favour. Besides, eight to one on yellow was a rotten rate. On any laws of probability the bank must win. The current gaming law has something of the same suspicious reaction, but thirty years ago life was less sheltered.

In some desperation, ignoring evens as too trivial to fatten my lean little wallet, I backed my birthday date at random . . . and won! I backed my age and some other personal numbers and to my own amazement I won more often than I lost. My four original chips multiplied astonishingly. I suddenly had £14 worth, which was over a month's pay in those days. No little black sheep who've gone astray for me, no reckless abandon . . . I promptly cashed my chips and made for the door.

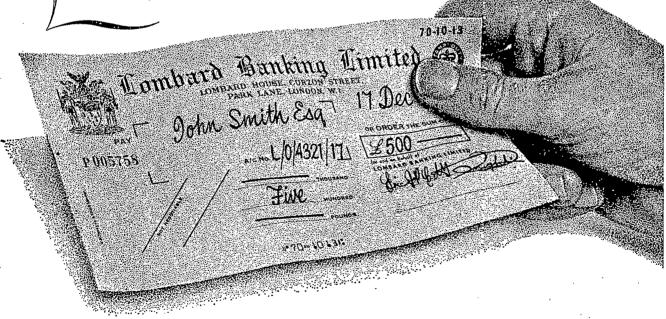

Two hefty henchmen, a hard-eyed hostess and Ned in some embarrassment, tried to convince me that to leave early with my winnings was a major social blunder, I explained to my friend the investment expert, but I kept my head – and my shirt.

But he still, unfortunately, wasn't persuaded to tell me any more about that impending merger.

This is how Equity & Law are advising the public to seek professional advice about life assurance.

If it is true that all cats are grey at night . . . choose yours in broad daylight.

Just like those grey cats, at first sight all life assurance policies may seem much the same. At second, third and fourth sight, the differences between them become more and more marked. There are over a hundred life assurance companies in the country, each with a choice of terms, conditions, benefits and premiums. Choosing which particular policy will suit you best can be a difficult business—or a simple one. Difficult if you try to sort it out for yourself; simple if you take expert advice.

So ask your insurance broker, or other professional financial adviser on business matters. He will suggest a suitable policy and, equally important, a thoroughly sound insurance company to take it out with—a company such as Equity & Law.

Company Taxation in Germany

by R. J. NIEHUS, Wirtschaftsprüfer, Düsseldorf

THE German corporation tax (Körperschaftsteuer) is the income tax of corporations and applies to separate legal entities (companies, associations, cooperatives), to institutions, and to commercial and industrial operations of Government bodies. In practice, the great importance of this tax stems from the fact that it is the income tax of the Aktiengesellschaften (AG, public companies), Gesellschaften mit beschränkter Haftung (GmbHs, closely controlled companies), and of co-operatives (Genossenschaften).

Unlimited tax status

Resident companies etc. 'enjoy' a so-called 'unlimited tax status' which means that all their income is subject to income taxation whether it arises from internal or external sources, unless it is subject to the provisions of a double taxation agreement.

A company is considered to be resident if its legal location or seat of management is in Germany. Either of these conditions is sufficient to make the company subject to unlimited taxation.

In this connection, the seat of management means the centre of its business activities (section 15, subsection 1 of Steueranpassungsgesetz). In practice the general rule is to ascertain where the person with authority to take final decisions in general business matters has his office. If this is inside Germany, full tax liability results.

The legal location of a company is determined by its articles of association. In the case of an AG or GmbH, the legal location must be stipulated in the articles of association, and must always be inside Germany.

Limited taxability

Companies that have neither their legal location nor their place of management inside Germany are subject to income taxation only to the extent to which their income relates to domestic sources. (Again, double tax agreements may contain special rules defining a taxable entity.)

The taxable income of a branch office may be determined either by the 'direct' or the 'indirect' method. Under the 'direct' method, the branch is treated for tax accounting purposes like any other separate accountable unit, whereas under the 'indirect' method the profit is ascertained according to an overall ratio, as, for instance, on the basis of the relation of the total company expenses to those of the branch, on the ratio of payrolls, sales, or any other suitable indicator.

Exemptions from corporation tax

Certain institutions defined by law (section IV, subsection I, corporation tax law), such as federal agencies, certain banks (for instance the Bundesbank (federal bank) or the Landwirtschaftliche Rentenbank (the central agricultural bank)), loan and savings institutions, certain co-operatives and companies having as their main purpose the furtherance of religious or charitable objects, trade associations, etc., are exempt from corporation tax.

These exempting provisions, however, apply only to companies with unlimited tax status (section IV, sub-section 3, corporation tax law). A foreign loan and savings institution, for instance, with an office in Germany, would be taxable on the profits earned through that office (again leaving out of account the provisions of a double tax treaty). The law further contains certain conditions that must be met to enable any such institution to qualify for tax exemption, the underlying purpose being not to tax bodies which either exclusively or to a considerable degree serve the interest of the general public.

Generally speaking, these exempting provisions do not go so far as to exclude from taxation dividend income earned by these institutions. If, for instance, a trade association has invested its surplus cash in securities, the interest received is subject to dividend withholding tax. The gross amount must be declared annually by the association, the capital tax withheld being available as a tax credit.

Determination of taxable income

General

Corporation tax is levied on the income the taxpayer has earned during the calendar year. Where a taxpayer's accounting year ends on a date other than December 31st, no allocation between two calendar years is made, but, the income of the accounting year is considered to be the income earned during the calendar year.

The concept of taxable income is the same as that in the income tax law. In fact, corporation tax law expressly refers to income tax law, which sets out the basic accounting provisions, while corporation tax law does not contain any provisions for separate determination of the taxable income. It only regulates certain exemptions or special cases.

Taxable income under German income tax law is the total of seven categories of income which are specifically mentioned and are set out below. All other income which does not come within these categories is exempt.

The categories of income are: (1) income from agricultural activities; (2) income from industrial and commercial activities; (3) income from professions; (4) income of employees; (5) rental income; (6) income from investments; and (7) other income of a recurring nature.

In the case of companies, only income from industrial or commercial activities can be relevant because under German commercial law, companies per se are considered a 'business' and therefore are obliged to keep books and to prepare an annual balance sheet and statement of profit and loss. This means that for companies ex definitione all their income, whether it arises from commercial or industrial activities in the proper sense or from, e.g. dividends or farming, is 'industrial or commercial income'. The profit forms the basis for the determination of taxable income.

The income tax law also contains certain rules regarding depreciation rates, write-down of inventories, etc. which must be observed by companies. Generally speaking, it may be said that these rules conform with what is generally known as the 'principle of cost or market price, whichever is the lower'. Moreover, the Courts have developed a few rules which enable the tax authorities to demand the capitalization of, e.g. intangible assets in certain cases where the commercial law does not require or even permit such a capitalization. For instance, if a taxpayer has acquired a business for a price higher than the total of tangible assets less the liabilities of that business, the difference, being goodwill, may under German commercial law be amortized immediately. The tax authorities, on the other hand, do not allow such depreciation.

Certain other differences between commercial and tax balance sheets are frequently found in connection with reserves. The tax authorities, generally speaking, allow the creation of a reserve only if there is real danger that the taxpayer may be liable for damages. For instance, a reserve for work done without charge to satisfy claims due to faulty products may be set aside if the taxpayer is certain that he will be exposed to such demands; in other words, if he knows — and has evidence to prove — that the products of the particular tax year were substandard.

As is the case with individual taxpayers engaged in industry or commerce, the loss established (or adjusted) for tax purposes, as the case may be, may be carried forward to the five ensuing tax years and be set off against any intervening profits made in the meantime in the order in which they have arisen.

Corporation tax is assessed on an annual basis. The accounting year of a taxpayer whose firm has been registered in the commercial register may end on a date other than December 31st, but in no case can it extend over more than twelve months. A taxpayer starting a new business may decide from the beginning that his accounting year shall end on a date other than December 31st. A changeover, however, from December 31st to another date requires the approval of the fiscal authorities. The relative income tax regulations are at present being disputed, and it is quite possible that the Supreme Tax Court may rule that in future no prior authority need be obtained and that a notification only will suffice.

'Disguised dividend' distributions

'Disguised dividend' distributions have to be added back to taxable income. This provision is of great practical importance. Suffice it here to state that the fiscal authorities consider that all transactions carried out for the benefit of a taxpayer, which normally the company would not undertake for a non-member and which have been treated as an expense, are a hidden profit distribution.

If, for example, a company has conducted market research for one of its shareholders free of charge or for too low a payment, the tax authorities may adjust the payment to the amount that would have been charged to a non-member. The resulting figure is considered a 'disguised dividend' which means that the taxable profit is increased by adding back the 'grossed up' distribution at 51 per cent; plus 25 per cent capital withholding tax.

Deductible expenses

In addition to normal business expenses covered by section 5 of the income tax law, which section — as stated above — rules that the profit shown on the annual balance sheet forms the basis on which to levy the corporation tax, certain expenses peculiar to companies are deductible.

These consist of formation and underwriting expenses including expenses connected with the issue of shares, pre-emptive rights, bonds, etc. If, however, the shares or bonds are issued at a premium, the expenses incurred have to be charged against the premium.

In the case of insurance companies the amounts transferred to the insurance reserve are deductible, and in a partnership limited by shares remuneration paid to the personally liable partners is deductible. Finally, all companies may treat as deductions donations made to institutions promoting religious, charitable, scientific or political purposes. However, the deduction may not exceed 5 per cent of taxable income or 0.2 per cent of total sales, whichever is the greater.

Lastly, income resulting from a cancellation of debt by a shareholder or creditor of the company does not constitute taxable income. It does, however, reduce the loss carry-forward.

Non-deductible expenses

All expenses not relating to the current business of a company but to the area of its financial structure and to the area of shareholders are not deductible. These mainly consist of payments made in order to meet an obligation under the articles of association; for instance, if a company is a shareholder in another company and it has been decided that in addition to subscribing to the shares (à fonds perdu) a capital contribution has to be made, and payments made to members of the board of supervisors. Furthermore, the net value tax (Vermögensteuer) as distinct from the net value tax payable by individuals is not deductible.

Affiliation privilege

In addition to fees collected by associations from their members, the so-called 'affiliation privilege' is the most important actual exemption from corporation tax. If an unlimited liability company has since the beginning of its accounting year owned at least 25 per cent of the voting stock of another company, dividends received on those shares do not constitute taxable income of the recipient company. The purpose of this provision clearly is to eliminate the double taxation which would otherwise arise first on the affiliated company and then on the holding company.

While it is the declared purpose of the law to avoid double taxation, it stipulates that both companies must be subject to unlimited taxation. In other words, the affiliation privilege applies only to resident companies. It cannot be claimed if the recipient is a company which is not subject to corporation tax at all because it is a foreign company.

The affiliated company has to pay income tax at the ordinary rate on its profit distributed to the holding company. If the holding company, however, does not redistribute the dividends, a so-called 'additional tax' becomes due generally in an amount of 36 per cent, being the difference between the reduced rate which is available if dividends are distributed and the 51 per cent payable where profits are retained. This rule reflects the intention of the legislature to stimulate the distribution of dividends to the final shareholder.

It should be noted that the so-called 'additional tax' applies only to dividends distributed following a share-holders' resolution. Disguised dividend distributions which, ex definitione, cannot have been the subject of such a resolution consequently cannot be liable to this additional tax.

Integrated companies (Organgesellschaften)

German tax judicature has developed the principle of integrated companies. This concept is not covered by corporation tax law but so far has materialized only in a special tax regulation.

An integrated company is a company which financially, economically and organizationally is controlled by a parent company to an extent that for all practical purposes it has become a branch of the latter. Generally speaking, integration does not exist if the parent owns only 51 per cent or less of the capital stock of the subsidiary company.

If integration exists and if, in addition, a subsidiary company by virtue of a separate profit pooling contract has agreed to transfer all its profits to the controlling company, the former is taxable only on its nondeductible items; for instance, net value tax compensation paid to members of the board.

The German fiscal authorities recognize a profit transfer agreement only if it has been concluded for a minimum period of five years. In the case of public companies such an agreement needs the approval of shareholders' meetings of both companies. Special safeguards have to be taken to ensure that minority shareholders obtain an adequate minimum dividend or some other guarantee of a fair return on their investment.

The normal rate of tax for unlimited corporate entities is 51 per cent on profits retained, and 15 per cent on profits distributed. It should be noted, however, that the rate for profits distributed is available only if such distribution is made following a shareholders' resolution properly passed. This seems to be of particular importance in the case of a GmbH where there is only one shareholder who exerts for all practicable purposes a 100 per cent control. Experience proves that in such a case the shareholder tends to disregard the formalities required by law for a distribution of profit.

It should further be noted that, if the maximum distribution is made, the rate increases to 23.4 per cent because the tax reserve created in the commercial books is considered by the tax authorities to be a retention of taxable income. Consequently, they demand 51 per cent on this income. This means that 51 per cent of 15 per cent has to be added to 15 per cent, which brings the rate to the aforementioned 23.4 per cent.

Special regulations apply in the case of a company whose capital is owned to an amount of at least 76 per cent by natural persons — provided that registered shares have been issued which, however, are not sold on a stock exchange or over the counter, and further provided such corporation does not own investments in other corporations in an amount exceeding its capital stock, and finally provided that its net value subject to net value tax, or the value of its investments as established for tax purposes, does not exceed DM.5 million.

If all these conditions have been met, the corporation tax for profits up to DM.50,000 is regulated on a progressive scale from 39 to 59 per cent, increasing by steps of DM.10,000. All other profits exceeding DM.50,000 are subject to a rate of 59 per cent. However, the taxpayers of such a corporation may opt to be taxed at regular rates available for all other corporations.

A flat rate of 49 per cent is applicable to all corporations with limited tax status. This, in particular, means that branches of foreign corporations have to pay 49 per cent tax on their income.

Annual returns and assessments

Corporations are required to file annual tax returns. These are followed up by an assessment from the tax authorities, showing the annual corporation tax liability. Usually the assessment also fixes the quarterly prepayments. Such prepayments are on principle determined on the basis of the last annual tax liability and usually amount to a quarter of the assessment payable on March 10th, June 10th, September 10th, and December 10th.

German-English double taxation agreement

Under the double taxation agreement concluded with the United Kingdom and revised on November 26th, 1964, the so-called 'principle of permanent establishment' applies, with the consequence that taxpayers resident in the United Kingdom can become taxable in Germany only – and this to a limited extent – if they maintain a permanent establishment in Germany within the meaning of the tax treaty. A 'permanent establishment' is any fixed business installation out of which the enterprise exclusively or in part conducts its business. If a United Kingdom enterprise maintains a 'permanent establishment' in Germany, it becomes taxable there on the profit attributable to such a permanent establishment. Also:

- (a) if the permanent establishment has dividend income, this is considered to be part of the taxable income of the permanent establishment;
- (b) if a U.K. taxpayer owns shares in a German company in respect of which he receives dividends, the German company is obliged to withhold a capital tax of 15 per cent in respect of such dividends.

The revised double taxation agreement introduced an important exception: in respect of dividend distributions made by a German company to a company residing in Great Britain which owns at least 25 per cent of the voting stock of a German company either directly or indirectly, the capital withholding tax of 25 per cent remains unchanged (as compared with the 15 per cent rate which previously was available generally). By this amendment the German Government tried to prevent companies in Great Britain taking advantage of the reduced corporation tax rate in addition to the reduced capital withholding tax rate by declaring a dividend which was then left with the German company in the form of a loan.

AUTHOR'S FOOTNOTE – As from January 1st, 1968, a so-called supplemental tax of 3 per cent of the tax payable has been introduced. In the case of companies, this new tax applies to corporation income tax, regardless of whether it has been calculated at 23'4 per cent or 51 per cent; it also applies to the capital withholding tax.

Taxation Cases

Full reports of the cases summarized in these columns will be published, with Notes on the Judgments, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'

Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Ferguson

In the Court of Session (First Division)

Income tax – Annual payment – Separation agreement – Sum free of income tax – Husband with no income chargeable in United Kingdom – Such income insufficient in another year – Whether wife assessable – Income Tax Act 1842, section 103 – Income Tax Act 1918, General Rule 23 (2) – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 122, 123 (Case III), 148, 169, 170, 506 (2).

In 1948 the taxpayer and her husband entered into a separation agreement, whereunder the husband undertook to pay the wife 'a sum of £35 monthly in advance free of income tax'. That sum had regularly been paid.

The husband was resident abroad during 1955-56, 1956-57 and 1957-58, and during those years he had no income chargeable to United Kingdom tax. For 1959-60 the husband was resident in this country, but his income chargeable here was £74 less than the amount required to meet the payments in that year. The wife was assessed under Case III of Schedule D for each of the first three years, and in respect of £74 for 1959-60.

It was contended on her behalf that the separation agreement provided for the payment of such a sum as, after deduction of income tax, would leave £35; and that the husband was assessable under section 170 of the Income Tax Act 1952. On behalf of the Revenue it was contended that the sum payable was £35 without any deduction in respect of income tax. The General Commissioners decided that the conduct of the parties over the years established that the intention was that the sum payable should be such a sum as, after deduction of tax at the standard rate, would leave £35.

Held: (1) the agreement provided for the payment of £35 a month without any deduction for United Kingdom income tax; (3) the Revenue have an option either to assess the recipient of an annual payment under section 148 of the Act, or to assess the payer under section 170; (3) the assessments on the wife were valid.

Financial Planning with a Corporate Financial Model

III—Examining Alternative Strategies

by A. S. JACKSON, F.C.A., A.A.C.C.A., G. G. STEPHENSON, M.Sc., and E. C. TOWNSEND, B.A.(ECON.), Ph.D.

In the two previous articles it was indicated how a financial model can assist the financial planning activity. To illustrate this it is now proposed to erect a hypothetical company, attach a set of financial conditions and to map the corporate consequences of alternative strategies. A financial model has been used to obtain the results.

Assumptions used in the model

For the purposes of demonstration the assumptions have been simplified. They are referred to briefly in the following paragraphs:

1. Investment profitability

All investments have the same level of earnings for each year of their lives, i.e. the income profile is represented by a straight line. The profile will be described in terms of a discounted cash flow rate of return, after corporation tax and investment grants.

2. Future growth

The rate of growth will mean the cumulative rate of increase of the stock of productive assets, valued at cost. There are no unproductive assets. Investment grants are held on the liabilities side of the balance sheet. All growth will attract the investment profitability mentioned above.

3. Investment characteristics

- (a) The investments take three years to design, erect and test.
- (b) The amount of an investment authorization is spent over three years in the proportions 15 per cent, 50 per cent and 35 per cent.
 - (c) All investments have a ten-year life.
 - (d) There is a straight-line depreciation policy.
- (e) Ten per cent of investment is working capital (stocks+debtors-creditors).

4. Level of gearing

Gearing is defined as the ratio of debt to total finance. Thus a company showing the following capital structure would be deemed to have a gearing ratio of 30 per

ent.				Pe	r cent
Funds from shareholder
Funds from debenture-l	ablders	• •	• •	••
Total funds					100

Three levels of gearing are studied in the model: 20 per cent, 30 per cent and 40 per cent. In all cases it is assumed that the lender's expectations with respect to the stability of the income stream can be met.

5. Dividend policy

The dividend rules incorporated in the model are as follows:

- (a) the total sum paid in dividend in any year shall not be less than 6.5 per cent of the total shareholders' funds; but
- (b) the dividend shall not be more than twice covered; and
- (c) a dividend shall not be lower than the declaration for the previous year. The dividend is calculated by reference to the value of equity and shareholders' reserves at the end of the previous year.

6. Use of surplus cash resources

Certain combinations of investment growth and profitability will result in the generation of surplus cash funds which are not required by the company. In this event the surplus is to be invested in short-term investments at 6 per cent per annum.

Conversely, temporary shortage of funds is remedied by overdraft facilities, which are assumed to cost 7 per cent per annum. Short-term debts are funded into debentures or share capital every third year.

7. Levels of corporation tax and investment grants

The taxation provisions assumed in the model are:

- (a) investment grants are receivable on all investments at 40 per cent rate;
- (b) corporation tax: rate of 40 per cent;
- (c) annual allowance against corporation tax for

'wear and tear' of plant: 20 per cent per annum on a reducing balance basis.

Period of calculation

The operation of the model must cover two timeperiods. The first is the period necessary to generate the company's present 'inheritance' of capital assets from the past. If plants take three years to construct and have profitable lives of ten years thereafter, the company's current asset stock is dependent upon the investment carried out by the company for the past thirteen years. Calculations within this historical period are merely concerned with generating the true nature of the company's present situation.

The second period of operation, which will run consecutively to the first in one continuous process on the computer, is the 'planning period'. A ten-year planning period has been selected.

Results from the model

Given both a model and a set of assumptions the first step is to answer the question 'What would be the result on the company's finances if we were to follow a given course of action?'

In order to become acquainted with the use of the model and to pinpoint the range of feasible financial strategies, it is useful to begin with a 'mapping exercise'. This allows the planner to develop an understanding of the effect and importance of the different decision variables at his command.

The following results are obtained from such a mapping exercise, carried out on the basis of the above assumptions. Graph I examines the effect of different rates of company growth on the company's finances. Graph II studies the effect of varying the profitability of the company's investments, while Graph III looks at the impact of alternative levels of gearing. Further mapping can be carried out to study the effects of varying the company's dividend policy, depreciation policy, and so on.

Graph I – Financial implications of corporate growth

All the graphs show the corporate impact of each strategy measured by its effect upon the shareholders' return (S.R.), which was defined earlier. Clearly, much of the value of the mapping exercise will be obtained from the specific study of particular aspects of the company's finances; future capital requirements, rates of return on capital, and so on. For reasons of economy of space only the summary statistic can be included here.

Let it be assumed that the company is reasonably confident about its ability to find investments with a discounted cash flow profitability of 11 per cent, and that it can obtain 30 per cent of its finance from fixed interest sources. The model is required to show the financial implications of different rates of growth, so the financial planner runs the model fourteen times (each run taking half a minute on the computer) for growth rates of 1 per cent to 14 per cent. The curve on Graph I is obtained by plotting the shareholders' returns for the fourteen growth strategies.

The curve rises until a rate of growth of about 8.5 per cent is reached. Thereafter the S.R. falls in response to further growth. The peak of the curve represents a rate of company growth of about 8 per cent to 9 per cent, at which the S.R. is at its maximum of 11.2 per cent. The company has now pinpointed its optimum growth strategy for the particular set of assumptions being examined.

In order to explain what is happening to the share-holders' return under the varying growth possibilities, the full results at four points will be examined in detail. These points are marked A, B, C and D, and represent growth rates of 2 per cent, 4 per cent, 8 per cent and 14 per cent per annum.

Strategy A: 2 per cent growth

An examination of the full computer print-out for this run of the model (not reproduced here) shows that for the assumptions chosen, 2 per cent growth is insufficient to utilize all of the funds generated by the investments. Part of the company's funds are therefore being invested in short-term investments earning 6 per cent per annum. The result is that the average level of profitability at which the company's funds are being utilized is reduced. Strategy A is unacceptable, since it fails to utilize the company's fund-generating abilities to the full.

A second feature of this strategy is that although the company is empowered to raise up to 30 per cent of its funds from debentures, it does not need to take advantage of this facility for raising cheap finance, since it is never short of self-generated cash resources. The company is utilizing expensive (retained equity) finance, but is only able to find profitable uses for a proportion of this. The shareholders' return from such a strategy is 9 1 per cent.

Strategy B: 4 per cent growth

Examination of the company's accounts produced by the computer for this strategy shows that 4 per cent growth is sufficient to absorb all internally generated cash. The shareholders' return rises from the 9.1 per cent to 9.9 per cent.

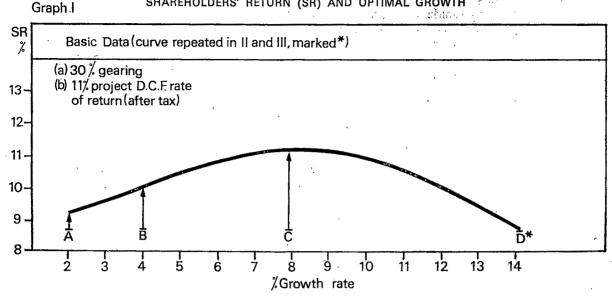

While the company's utilization of funds is significantly improved by raising the growth rate to 4 per cent, this rate of growth is still insufficient to bring fixed-interest finance into play.

Strategy C: 8 per cent growth

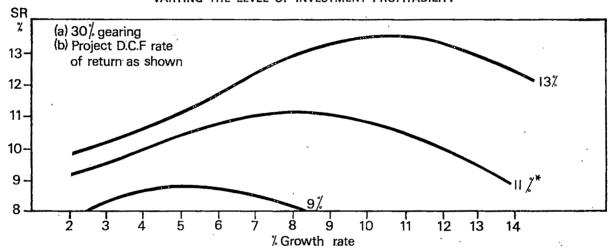

The essential feature of the accounts for this strategy is that the company's growth rate is just sufficient to utilize the whole of its internally-generated funds and, in addition, to utilize the benefits of gearing.

Strategy C describes a company which has achieved an optimal growth path, balancing the efficient utilization of resources in capital investment against the efficient raising of funds, using the advantages of gearing to the full. The shareholders' return from this strategy is 11.2 per cent, and it is worth repeating that this return to shareholders is obtained by investing their funds, backed up by the cheaper funds obtained from debentures, in capital projects with a D.C.F. return of 11 per cent, after corporation tax and investment grants. This is an excellent example of the magnifying effect of gearing, which in this case has been more than sufficient to offset the effects of a dividend withholding tax.

SHAREHOLDERS' RETURN (SR) AND OPTIMAL GROWTH

Graph II VARYING THE LEVEL OF INVESTMENT PROFITABILITY

Strategy D: 14 per cent growth

From strategy C the planning authority will know that growth in excess of 8–9 per cent must be financed by a mixture of further debentures and, for the first time, new shares. Strategy D requires the shareholders to put new capital into the company, thereby depressing their return. In fact, the shareholders' return from this strategy has been depressed to 8·9 per cent.

Conclusion

The conclusion to be drawn from Graph I is that for any set of financial circumstances, there is an optimal rate of growth for a company to adopt if it is to maximize the interests of its shareholders over a long period.

The optimal growth rate is that which balances the activity of raising funds efficiently against that of utilizing funds efficiently. The consequence of maintaining a rate of growth, which is not the optimal rate, is prejudicial to shareholders.

Graph II – Financial implications of investment profitability

Graph I shows how the rate of growth undertaken by a company has a significant effect upon the company's finances and upon its shareholders. In the same way, it is possible to examine the corporate consequences of variations in the level of investment profitability. Graph II traces the effect of replacing the earlier assumption that all plants earn a D.C.F. return of it per cent, with alternative assumptions that the level of profitability is 9 per cent and 13 per cent. Using the growth rate as before the model calculates the strategies. Table I summarizes the results shown diagrammatically in Graph II.

The Effect of Profitability

Optimum growth rate (per cent)	Shareholders' return (per cent)
5.5	8.9
8.5	11.2
	growth rate (per cent) 5.5 8.5

As might be expected, higher profitability results in both higher optimal growth (because more funds are being generated internally) and an increase in the shareholders' return at the optimal growth rate. This information allows the financial planning authority to press for adjustments to the company's growth rate in response to long-term trends in the profitability of the company's activities.

Graph III – Financial implications of debt financing

Just as the company's growth strategy is affected by the profitability of its investments, so the level of gearing attainable by a company has a significant effect upon its choice of growth rate and upon the shareholders' return. Table II summarizes the results of mapping the effects of gearing, which are shown more fully in Graph III. The D.C.F. rate of return on investments is assumed to be 11 per cent.

TABLE II

The Effect of Gearing

Gearing level (per cent)	Optimum growth rate (per cent)	Shareholders' return (per cent)
20	7.0	10-4
40	10-0	12.4

The financial planner will have in mind the possibility that forecast profits may not materialize. Since the growth path will have been set by profitability and growth is difficult to stop, he will require to know what action may be taken to preserve the optimal growth path. An adjustment to the level of allowable gearing could be one solution.

Table II shows that the benefits of gearing are considerable. With investments earning a D.C.F. return of 11 per cent, it is possible for the company to increase its return to shareholders by 1 per cent by raising its maximum level of gearing by 10 per cent. With typical shareholders' returns in the United Kingdom running at about 9 per cent this is clearly an important consideration.

Conclusions

Five important, if tentative, conclusions may be drawn from the summary results described above.

- (1) A company will not utilize its funds to the share-holders' best advantage unless profitability and growth are planned conjointly. The use of high cut-off rates in making investment decisions will not be advantageous to the company's share-holders unless sufficient investment opportunities are obtainable to achieve the appropriate growth rate thereby ensuring that the profit stream is fully reinvested.
- (2) For any set of financial circumstances, there is an optimal rate of growth which a company should seek to maintain. In many cases this rate of - growth simultaneously minimizes the average cost of capital and maximizes the continuing interests of the company's shareholders, as measured by the shareholders' return.

- (3) The use of a financial planning model demonstrates that the interests of shareholders may be increased by:
 - (a) raising the average profitability of investment if this does not reduce the company's growth opportunities; and
 - (b) increasing the maximum level of gearing which the company may achieve.

Further mapping exercises with such a model may be used to demonstrate the implications of alternative dividend policies, alternative depreciation policies, and so on

- (4) There is a considerable difference between United Kingdom companies and American companies in the amount of debt capital employed. There is also a large difference in the United Kingdom between the permissible level of gearing (as defined in the articles of association) and the effective level actually negotiated. With the traditional attitudes of both borrowers and lenders working against increased gearing levels, a considerable amount of potential growth is lost.
- (5) Since growth in excess of, or less than, the optimal rate is detrimental to the interests of shareholders, it is beneficial for companies to attempt to maintain steady growth, at the optimal rate.

(To be concluded.)

by R. IAN TRICKER, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.Dip. M.A.

P. D. Leake Research Fellow in the Oxford Centre for Management Studies

In this article the author describes the role of the major American accounting bodies in developing the financial executive and presents some findings of a comparative study between the American financial executive and his British counterpart.

The author acknowledges the generous help he has received from the organizations described; the views expressed, however, are his own.

N Britain the financial executive in a company is expected by top management to hold a professional accountancy qualification. This statement is not likely to surprise British managers. A survey conducted by the Institute of Directors¹ showed that, irrespective of company size, more of its members were chartered accountants than holders of any other degree or qualification.

This emphasis on professional qualification is also borne out by the results of a small survey² on which this article is based. Fourteen British and fourteen American senior financial executives responded to a questionnaire addressed to a random sample of major British and American corporations. One of the questions asked them to grade the educational background of potential controllers or finance managers. Nearly half the British managers thought a chartered accountant's qualification essential, being unprepared to consider any applicant further without it. All of the British replies considered the qualification as at least a

When the American executives were asked the same question they tended to emphasize academic rather than professional qualifications. Only 8 per cent placed the certified public accountant in the 'essential' category of required qualifications for the future financial executive. Over 80 per cent ranked a first degree as 'very desirable' compared with 40 per cent in Britain.

These differences in attitude reflect the different professional and educational situation between Britain and America. Before reporting any further attitudinal divergences between the British and the American financial executive, let us briefly study the role of the various major American accounting bodies developing the financial executive.

Undoubtedly, the British accountancy profession is in a state of dramatic evolution and some comparisons may contribute to the re-thinking of the role of the professional societies and the development of the man who aspires to the post of financial executive.

desirable attribute. Over a third of the respondents also indicated their insistence on a cost and works accountant's qualification, although there was greater variability in the replies and some graded it as 'less than desirable' or 'very useful'.

There are five principal accounting organizations in the United States:

The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (A.I.C.P.A.).

The National Association of Accountants (N.A.A.).

The Financial Executives Institute (F.E.I.).

The Institute of Internal Auditors.

None of them directly resembles a British accounting organization. The American Accounting Association is really the academic arm of the profession, catering for the educators in the field. It publishes The Accounting Review which concentrates on matters of accounting theory and pedagogy. The Institute of Internal Auditors is self-descriptive. We shall focus on the first three of the above-mentioned bodies as being of primary interest to the work of the financial executive.

Certified public accountants

There are nearly 100,000 C.P.A.s in the United States, of whom about 61,000 (61 per cent) are members of the American Institute of C.P.A.s. Unlike Britain, membership of the professional institute is not obligatory for qualification or permission to practise. Each of the fifty States has a State Board of Accountancy with statutory jurisdiction over such matters as professional conduct, organization, grading of examinations and the issue of C.P.A. certificates in accordance with the laws of that State. These boards are 'licensing' authorities and may not delegate their legal responsibilities to a professional society.

The State Boards of Accountancy should be distinguished from the State societies of C.P.A.s, which are privately-organized professional bodies at a State level. They are independent of each other and of the American Institute of C.P.A.s which is the professional body at the national level. The A.I.C.P.A., however, spends £30,000 a year maintaining relations with the State societies.

Membership of the local State society and the A.I.C.P.A. is voluntary. A C.P.A. need not belong to either; he may belong to one or both. The requirements for admission to the A.I.C.P.A., with various exceptions, is a State C.P.A. certificate and two years' public accounting experience.

Just over two-thirds (41,000) of the members of the A.I.C.P.A. are engaged in public accounting practice. The other third (20,000) are in corporate, Government, university and other posts. Although statistics are not available on the C.P.A.s who are not members of the Institute, there is reason to believe that they are also roughly divided between practice and business in the proportion 2:1.

For comparison, membership of the three British Institutes of Chartered Accountants and the Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants is approaching 70,000, of whom roughly half are in public accounting practice (either as practitioners or employees) and half are in business or other posts. There are nearly 10,000 members of the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, the majority of these being in business posts. Cross registrations do not significantly affect these membership totals.

Although the A.I.C.P.A. has no licensing power the State boards all use a uniform C.P.A. examination prepared by the Institute and use their advisory examination grading service. Ninety per cent of C.P.A. candidates now are graduates and the percentage of those who pass is higher.

The Institute has an income from members' dues of about £620,000 and a considerably higher income, over $\int_{\mathbb{R}^2} \frac{1}{2}$ million in total, considering the publication receipts, conference and course fees and examination fees, and contributions towards research from outside sources. By comparison, the English Institute alone has a members' fees income of about £,525,000 and a total income of about £960,000.

The services of the American Institute are similar in many respects to those of the English Institute. Members can call on a library and technical information service; statements on auditing procedures and professional ethics are issued; bulletins on the management of an accounting practice are published; comments are submitted to Federal authorities on taxation matters; relations are maintained with Government, universities and others. The Institute publishes The Journal of Accountancy covering a widespread collection of topics and readership levels, also The CPA, a monthly house organ of the Institute, and Management Sciences, aimed at covering the newer systems, control and decision-making topics likely to be of interest to the C.P.A.

A comprehensive professional development programme is promoted by the Institute which recognizes the continual development and remedial work necessary for its members under a rapidly changing technology. Accounting research also figures prominently in the Institute's work. Recent studies have included 'Goodwill on business combinations', 'Accounting for foreign operations' and 'Reporting of income taxes in financial statements'. A very important study published recently considers the 'common body of knowledge' of the C.P.A.

Like the British institutes of chartered accountants, the A.I.C.P.A. is orientated towards the practice of public accounting and the problems facing the practitioner, although interpreted widely to include matters of management science.

National Association of Accountants

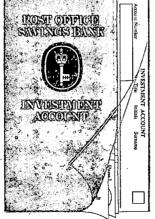

The N.A.A. is quite unlike any accounting organization in Britain. It has nearly 60,000 members and is expanding by about 3,000 a year, largely as a result of membership campaigns. It is not an examining or a professional regulating body. Members are drawn from all levels of achievement and competence, from book-keeper to chief executive. Anyone who is in-

There's more to a merger than high finance!

Chesham do far more than plan mergers. We originate the ideas that make new mergers possible. We understand industrial problems because we know industry and because we come from industry. As the largest, independent merger specialists in Great Britain and Europe, Chesham apply their experience to the entire complex of problems and possibilities that mergers involve. We match the whole structure of a company, financial, commercial, industrial—and personal—with the most suitable partner. In this our service is uniquely comprehensive. Your Clients can discuss any ideas they may have with one of our directors in complete confidence. They will be under no obligation and we probably know the very people they have in mind and could pave the way for a friendly deal. We will, of course, meet your own professional fees arising from any business you initiate.

tetested can apply for membership. Some join to receive the publications. There are a number of librarians on the membership role as a consequence.

No comprehensive data on members' background is available but a sample suggested that roughly 15 per cent were accountants in public practice, the remainder being in industrial posts with the exception of a small academic and student contingent, overseas members, particularly from Canada, Latin America, Japan and Australia and the non-accounting members.

The Association offers its members technical and professional services through both its central office and the two hundred local chapters. These local chapters organize monthly meetings and seminars on selected topics of interest to the accountant in industry. The central office organizes a series of conferences on techniques, practices and the newer concepts in management accounting. These programmes include such topics as basic mathematics for business, advanced models – optimizing methods and deterministic simulations – contribution accounting, pricing policies and practice, integrating business information systems and long-range profit planning. An annual convention, which emphasizes the social as well as the professional activity, is also centrally organized.

Another important activity of the Association is research. Staff-written publications are produced two or three times a year. Recent topics have included attempts to synthesize 'concepts for management accounting', 'applications of flexible budgeting' and 'financial analysis as a guide to capital expenditure decisions'.

Financial Executives Institute

To be eligible for membership of the Financial Executives Institute an applicant must be at least 30 years old and have had one year's experience as a financial executive with a large firm. The regulations require that, broadly, the applicant shall be employed as an executive officer responsible either for the controllership function in a company with a tangible net worth of at least two million dollars, or be responsible for the treasureship function in a company with a total capital employed of at least ten million dollars.

From these stringent qualifications it will be obvious that amongst the 5,000-odd active members of the F.E.I. are some of the most influential financial executives in the United States. The Institute do not conduct membership campaigns, not all applications are accepted and it is widely considered to be an honour to belong. In addition to the active members there are a small number of academic associates by invitation. It is interesting to note that many financial executives who have become corporate presidents of some of the largest companies in the States continue to be associated with the Institute.

Although the educational background of the membership is not available, an interesting observation by one member was that whereas ten or fifteen years ago the major channel of entry was graduation in accounting, then into public accounting for a few years before entering business, nowadays most applicants had entered the financial field through a Master's degree programme of a university and thence directly into a company.

Primarily, the F.E.I. fulfils three major functions. First, to be a catalyst in bringing its members together through the fifty-six local chapters, the five springtime area conferences and the annual conference in the autumn; secondly, to assist in the improvement of the knowledge of members by the monthly magazine and the work of the research foundation (the funds for which are provided by supplementary contribution from members and their firms); thirdly, to facilitate the financial executive's job through the work of various committees. Although the F.E.I. is not a lobbying body, it does have a reputation in Washington for being the spokesman for business in matters affecting financial management and accounting.

The Institute has an international liaison committee and has assisted in the formation of financial executive institutes in Mexico and Paris, although they have no formal affiliation with these groups.

Relationships between accounting bodies

Although the five professional accounting bodies previously mentioned have largely different objectives, there none the less appears to be a very friendly and workable relationship between them. Their officers meet periodically to discuss programmes and to liaise in order to avoid duplication; the research directors also meet. Another interesting aspect of liaison is the joint recruitment campaign into the profession conducted at the high school and college level.

Comparative study

Table I overleaf amplifies the comments at the beginning of this article on the response of the small sample of financial executives in Britain and America when asked to give their opinion of the relative importance of the various professional and educational backgrounds using a six-point grading scheme ranging from 'essential' (i.e. absolutely necessary, without this attribute the applicant cannot be considered further) down to 'disadvantageous' (i.e. likely to prove a handicap in this post).

The detailed response of Table 1 conveys some further information. In the controller post both the C.P.A. and the chartered accountant were considered to be at least 'desirable' by all respondents. In the treasurer post, however, the chartered accountant showed a much greater edge on his C.P.A. counterpart. All the British replies ranked the chartered accountant as at least a 'desirable' qualification, whereas the C.P.A. was considered at least 'desirable' by only 17 per cent; as 'useful' but 'not really necessary' by 50 per cent and as of 'no significance' by 33 per cent in the States.

Regarding the master's degree in business administration, both British and American replies were distributed around the 'desirable' point with the American rather more favourably biased. This result is perhaps surprising in view of the very small numbers of master's degree graduates in Britain.

At the first degree level all replies placed this in at least the 'desirable' position. The British replies peaked about the 'desirable' (i.e. an important attribute, not essential for the post but likely to prove of value) grade level, and the Americans a grade higher — 'very desirable' (i.e. without this attribute the candidate must be exceptional in other respects). This tends to reflect the present educational position in the two countries. In fact, not all of the American respondents completed this line, probably presuming that a man applying for such a post would obviously have a first degree anyway.

Respondents were asked to list and grade any other professional and educational backgrounds that would influence decision. Few took the opportunity to add to their previous rankings. Of those who did, one British respondent would be influenced by good public school education, another by good G.C.E. 'A' levels for both posts. One British and one American reply indicated the advantage of a legal qualification for the treasurer post.

To compare the ideas held on either side of the Atlantic on the important skills and abilities of the financial executive, respondents were asked to grade – again using the six-point scale – a list of various attributes, arranged alphabetically, which it was suggested applicants for the post of financial controller might hold. Tables 2 and 3 summarize the results of this grading. The various attributes offered are now arranged in order of the importance attached to them by the respondents. The mean weighting given by respondents to each attribute is also shown for comparative purposes.

The first striking comparative feature is the greater emphasis placed by the American executive on the importance of the candidate for the controllership position having demonstrated supervisory ability as manager of his own department. Apart from this, there is a marked consistency in the relative positions of each of the attributes between the British and the American respondents. The top ten, for example, show very little divergence. It is interesting to note, however, that although the relative order of the attributes is very similar, the weighting attached by the American respondents tends to be rather heavier in many cases than their British counterpart. In other words, they place rather more emphasis on the need for each of the various attributes.

In response to an open-ended question in which respondents were given the opportunity to indicate what other skills they would look for, some interesting comments from the American executives include – ability to communicate both orally and written; knowledge of accounting for foreign operations and foreign exchange controls; leadership qualities; 'takecharge' ability; a sense of objectivity; willingness to learn from experience; ability to administer and supervise people; ability to handle volumes of work; and ability to get along with people and sell ideas.

To the same question the British respondents offered the following: experience of and competence in handling shop-floor management; an understanding of shop-floor problems and implementing procedures; ability to read and understand information rapidly; familiarity with the graphical methods of presentation; knowledge of computer uses; ability to analyse complex situations into components and ability to write good reports; knowledge and personal experience of negotiation procedures for the acquisition of companies; and a knowledge of Stock Exchange and public company procedures relative to shareholders and financial authorities.

Conclusions

From the replies of the financial executives which contained much more data than we have been able to review in this short article and from a number of supporting interviews, it has become apparent that the differences between the American and the British financial executive do not lie in the content of their job or the skills, techniques or abilities required to perform it; rather they lie in the educational and professional backgrounds.

It is quite clear that the British chartered accountant has a significance and prestige which is unique. Undoubtedly, this is a subject which will be aired excessively when the proposals for the changes in professional structure are announced. This article has not sought to examine the merits or demerits of the situation in Britain or the United States. It is suggested, however, that the comparison raises a number of interesting questions.

A Manager's Guide to Computer Processing

by Roger L. Sisson and Richard G. Canning. John Wiley & Sons Ltd, London. 56s.

In this book the authors describe in non-technical language the way in which a computer-based information system integrates into the general process of management control. The book is intended primarily for managers who are unfamiliar with the use of computers, in order to show how they can be used to help management make better decisions.

The book starts with an examination of the information needs of a business and the way in which the information processing system can be structured to provide for those needs. In this section the information processing is treated as a business providing an end-product (reports, action documents, etc., for management) and comparing this with the engineering process in manufacturing goods. The similarities are quite revealing as, for example, the comparison between the lead time in ordering materials and the response time in an information system.

Having set the pattern of information needs, the authors then trace the different methods used for processing information, from purely manual methods to current sophisticated computer techniques. E.D.P. systems have themselves had an impact on other management areas and these are examined, together with the way in which they fit into the organization within which they work.

The computer also brings staff problems that must be handled with some care. This need for awareness of the impact a computer can have in personal terms is highlighted by the final chapter which briefly examines the future trends in computer processing.

London's Industrial Heritage

by Aubrey Wilson

David & Charles (Publishers) Ltd, Newton Abbot, Devon. 63s net.

The size and diversity of London makes it the ideal place for the researches of industrial archaeologists, for many industries within its boundaries have risen, prospered and dwindled, leaving, in many instances, lamentably little in the way of relics and records. Examples are the silk-weavers of Spitalfields who flourished in the eighteenth century and, rather later in point of time, the piano manufacturers of St Pancras. Other activities which have come and gone or are now declining cover the making of candles, sealing-wax, lime, locomotives, veneer and snuff. There are, too, delightful oddities like the street lamp in Carting Lane which burns off all the impurities of the sewer gas which is carried to its flames; the underground remains in Hampstead Road of the valiant attempt to run a pneumatic dispatch railway; and at Paddington and Camden Town the elaborate stabling quarters of the thousands of horses once employed by the railways.

All these and many more memorials to London's commercial past are described by Mr Aubrey Wilson in what must be one of the most unusual guide books ever compiled. He admits that he had 'a sinister, latent purpose' in writing it, namely to draw the public's attention to the fact that many of the buildings and machines he mentions are in danger of being destroyed during the next twenty years. The wider the circulation his book has, then, the greater should be the chance of saving at least a part of this unique heritage. Text and photographs (by Mr Joseph McKeown) combine admirably to present the case for preservation.

Cost-benefit Analysis

SIR, — In his letter in your February 3rd issue, Mr D. Bailey comments on my article on 'Cost-benefit Analysis', January 20th issue. He says that 'it was unfortunate that R. F. J. Dewhurst's article lacked references to the literature on the subject'. He goes on to give two quotations which, as he says, show clearly that 'if the accountant is to venture on the thin ice of cost-benefit analysis, he must proceed with considerable caution'. Both publications, by the way, appear to be by economists (the latter is Surveys of Economic Theory, Vol. III, 1966).

Now I agree that this is a relatively uncharted area. But so was Australasia 200 years ago. No doubt Captain Cook did proceed with considerable caution, but the point is that he did proceed. Some astronaut some day soon will go to the moon. Are accountants to stay where they are? Not so many years ago (before the arrival of D.C.F.) it was difficult to justify, say, £100,000 spent on new numerical control equipment in terms of increased cash flow from profits. Is it going to be for ever impossible to justify investing the same amount of money in public relations, advertising, research, or training?

Perhaps I am wrong, perhaps all this sort of work should be left to economists. Perhaps 'it is for public opinion, as reflected in the Legislature, to determine policy (i.e. make a value judgement) with the aid of the best information concerning the consequences of their collective choice, and in accordance with the community's goals'. Or is any accountant prepared to venture forth and give me some guide lines on how one could proceed in producing figures on which to base recommendations for expenditure on these items?

Yours faithfully,

R. F. J. DEWHURST.

Non-trading Bodies - Capital and Revenue

SIR, – The new look given to the accounts of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales last year, and the interest shown in distinctions between capital and revenue arising from investment grants, lead me to ask the views of your readers on the accounting problems of non-trading concerns.

I am convenor of a study group of chartered secretaries in Wellington, New Zealand, examining the problems of non-trading concerns – over ten thousand in number – incorporated under our Incorporated Societies Act 1908, which makes virtually no recommendations on accounting matters. There are, however, many points in connection with entrance fees, life membership fees, and donations which give rise to accounting problems of some importance. Again, as income is not normally taxable, questions of the treatment of depreciation and replacement of fixed assets are not necessarily solved on commercial lines.

Standard textbooks on accounting rarely seem to cover points such as these, as examination syllabuses inevitably emphasize the problems of commercial corporations. We would appreciate information concerning any systematic treatment of the subject, or notes on the accounting practice of any body specially affected by such problems.

Yours faithfully,

W. S. BOOTH.

Decimal Currency

SIR, – The report of Mr N. E. A. Moore's remarks on the preparation for decimals to the Institute of Office Management (December 23rd, 1967 issue) did not, unfortunately deal with a problem which interests me.

At the moment, we head our columns: f s d. Should we think of heading them f cents in future? If we do, we run into a difficulty because of the half-cent. How do we write $65\frac{1}{2}$ cents? Should it be f0.655? If so, our heading must change. Should it be simply f's or f0.000?

Or, heaven forbid, are we to adopt the solution which is being marketed by one machine firm and write £0.65½?

Yours faithfully,

DOUGLAS GARBUTT.

'Cake-cutting'

T is not so many years ago that 'cake-cutting' was first hailed as something novel and radical in company reporting. It came in various guises – bar charts, graphs, segmented circles, etc., or the mere showing in shillings and pence or in percentages, an analysis of every £1 of income. At a time when companies disclosing turnover were the out-and-out revolutionaries, this 'cake cutting' exercise was considered to be a breakthrough since, by a process of arithmetical deduction, it was possible to get a fair idea of turnover.

'Cake-cutting' also put industrial costs – in terms of raw materials, services and wages – into perspective against profits and dividends (dividends were net in those days). The exercise provided shareholders with a new insight into the operations and finances of their companies.

But nowadays the development generally of more enlightened company reporting, prompted by the example of go-ahead companies and by acceptance of the point that disclosure did not bring instant financial ruin, has made 'cake-cutting' old hat.

When even profit and loss accounts started to open with sales figures and costs deducted to leave trading profits, 'cake-cutting' became an optional extra rather than an essential part of company reporting. But when it was first introduced it created quite a stir and it was definitely one of the stepping-stones towards more informative company reporting.

C. & J. Hampton

This week's reprint of the accounts of C. & J. Hampton Ltd, manufacturers of 'Record' tools, takes one back to those 'cake-cutting' days. The company does not report its turnover. Mr Anthony B. Hampton, the chairman, comments that 'although during the year there has been a decrease in home market orders, the back-log of unexecuted orders enabled us to achieve increased home sales'. On exports he observes that 'an all-time record has been set with export sales up by 25 per cent and approaching £1\frac{1}{4} million.' But he does not say what percentage that £1\frac{1}{4} million was of total sales.

The C. & J. Hampton shareholder who wants to get an idea of his company's sales has to turn to the 'cake-cutting' figures under the heading of 'Each £1 of income was spent as follows'. Those figures are included in the reprint and if the shareholder is good at arithmetic, he may by reference to the percentages shown in the 'cake-cutting' column and in figures in the Five-year Record in the original, arrive at various answers to the turnover point.

Turnover looks to be in the region of £3.7 million, although a calculation based on the depreciation percentage gives a lower figure than working on the other obvious items.

Goodwill

Presumably the directors consider that the evil day of turnover disclosure should be postponed as long as possible. Failure to report turnover for the year under review is, however, all the more annoying to the reader of the report since Mr Hampton records that the year was 'the most successful the company has ever known in every department of activity' and 'subsidiaries in Canada and South Africa both increased their sales and profits to a level never before attained.'

So it was a good year all round. Significant improvement in liquidity resulted from 'the increased sales and profits and a reduction in stock levels'. In the accounts the decision to write off the goodwill of a subsidiary amounting to £40,100, is 'considered prudent as the activities of the subsidiary will shortly be merged completely with those of the parent company, the products having been largely rationalized and production integrated'.

But which subsidiary, again Mr Hampton does not say. In 1961 the company acquired Woden Tools Ltd and Fabrex Tools Ltd – both being shown as separate whollyowned subsidiary companies in the group detail. Apart from Record Tool Co Ltd the other wholly-owned sub-

The Investments are unquoted and the Directors' estimate of their value at 30th September, 1967, was £400. Aggregate Directors' Emoluments for the year amounted to £25,861 (1966—£25,619) in respect of executive services, pension scheme contributions and benefits, and £1,000 (1966—£1,000) in respect of Fees.

There are Contingent Liabilities on Bills of Exchange amounting to £22,071 (1966—£15,490) and £4,733 in respect of Counter Indemnities (1966—£3,475) and £4,700 in respect of a claim by the Industrial Council for the Steel Industry against an Overseas Subsidiary. There are Contracts for Capital Expenditure of approximately £28,000 which are not provided for in the Accounts (1966—£55,000).

Devaluation

Shareholders are told that if post-devaluation rates had been used for the conversion of sterling in the group accounts, there would have been an additional credit of approximately £35,000 representing the increased value in terms of sterling of the company's overseas subsidiaries. Devaluation will put up prices of certain raw materials but 'this is not expected to be onerous'. On the other hand, devaluation should provide export opportunities to offset, in some degree, an anticipated reduction in home market sales because of Government restrictions.

Loss of export rebates and SET premium will cost some £40,000 in a full year. The first quarter of the current year has gone well, with only a marginal drop in sales, but costs are rising and a substantial claim for increased wages and salaries and extra holidays is in the pipeline. Sales, the chairman considers, may approach 1967 levels but he does not believe it will be possible to maintain profits at the 1967 rate.

One would have though that such conditions were an added reason for providing a sales figure behind the 24 per cent improvement in pre-tax profits to a record £436,252 in the year under review. Anticipating the requirements of the 1967 Companies Act by a year — in reporting terms—would not have been an outrageously daring decision.

CITY NOTES

If there is going to be anything to stop the rise in equity prices then, presumably, it will be the Budget, but the present tone of the market suggests that the combination of economic optimism plus fear of holding cash will steamroller the rise through even the strongest obstacle that a tough Budget can erect. It is interesting to note the change in tone of the current crop of stockbrokers' market surveys.

At the turn of the year the tone was cautious and comment was directed at the uncertainty created by devaluation, the rise in industrial costs and the possibility that, in index terms, the market would react to the string of 'Government measures' to follow in devaluation's wake. Now comment is directed to the fact that the Government's spending cuts make little economic difference for the time being and that the authorities are prepared to see an all-out consumer boom this side of the Budget. Further than that the accent is being placed on the prospect of rising industrial output in 1968.

Some brokers are still advocating an all-out policy of equity investment almost regardless of the pitch of prices. Comment on these lines must have its effect on investment and stock-market morale. The institutions and unit trusts are still heavy equity investors and not until there is firm evidence of a stronger gilt-edged market are they likely to change the emphasis away from equities and towards fixed interest stocks.

Such that the market value of mergers and take-overs so far this year is already well ahead of the £1,000 million total of the whole of last year which was, by general consent, a record merger year. A by-product of mergers on the plane at which current deals are being conducted is an awareness by other major groups that their particular positions may be affected. The intended Thorn Electrical Industries—Radio Rentals merger, for example, has made General Electric look to its position in the television industry. Courtaulds' bid for Northgate Group has naturally led to suggestions of renewed textile trade competition between I.C.I. and Courtaulds—I.C.I. having a 20 per cent stake in Northgate. Mergers could lead to third party battles.

THERE has been keen City interest in the decision of the Victor Value supermarket group to drop trading stamps in favour of price reductions as a considered operational policy. The cost to Victor Value of giving trading stamps was £1 million last year and it has been decided that the money previously spent on trading stamps can be used to better effect. The decision was taken following market research which suggested that over 80 per cent of housewives would prefer reduced prices and better service from supermarkets rather than trading stamps.

Training for the Professions – Should the State Play a Part?

Discussion by M.P.s at London Students' Meeting

SIR EDWARD BOYLE, Bt, M.P., Conservative Shadow' Minister for Education, Mr Emanuel Shinwell, M.P., Labour M.P. for Easington, and Mr Jeremy Thorpe, M.P., Leader of the Liberal Party, joined in discussing the place of the State in training for the professions at the annual President's Meeting of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London last week.

Presiding over the meeting in Guildhall was Mr G. R. Appleyard, F.C.A., President of the Society. The Lord Mayor was represented by Sir Harold Gillett, Bt, M.C., F.C.A. Chairman of the discussion was Mr Godfrey Judd, M.A., F.C.A.,

SIR EDWARD BOYLE'S REMARKS

First to speak was Sir Edward Boyle who, in the course of his remarks, said:

First I want to congratulate the Institute of Chartered Accountants on what is surely their very important decision, from next year onwards, to raise the conditions of entry of articled clerks so that your profession becomes not just an 'O' level profession but compulsorily an 'A' level profession. This, of course, fits in with the whole history of the Institute which has been one of gradually increasing educational qualifications.

Another thing I would like to say about your past history. The correspondence colleges have played a very considerable part in the training of articled clerks, and I look on the correspondence colleges as the most fantastically overlooked part of our whole educational system in Britain. One can spend ten years in the House of Commons normally without ever hearing correspondence colleges mentioned; but I believe they have played a more important part in our system of professional training than most people realize. For myself I believe that we have got to have more organization, registration, and grading of correspondence colleges for the future than we have had in the past. I also believe the time is not far distant when students will be wanting to get a modest grant in order to pursue a correspondence course and all these things have got to be taken more seriously for the future.

Of all the national objectives before Britain today one of the most important is that we should want to see higher standards of professional training in this country, not only at the top level but at the middle level also. The test of our commitment to efficiency as a nation lies in the standards of professional training we provide – not only to the

designed to solve business problems faster than ever before

EPIC 2000

It can be programmed to learn the steps of any calculation; you simply press the 'learn' key, do a problem once, and the EPIC will automatically perform the same arithmetic functions for as long as you like. It is really fast: addition and subtraction take 4/1000th of a second, while square roots can be found in only half a second! Line-by-line selective print—out of both problem and answer. And it's as simple to use as a 10-key adding machine.

EPIC 3000

For more complex problems, you may need the EPIC 3000. This has up to three times more loading capacity, performs difficult scientific and engineering formulae with ease and handles the most sophisticated business problems. Again it provides line-by-line selective printed results, and is equally fast and easy to operate.

Introduce the benefits of electronic calculating to your business. Be a logical stride ahead. With Monroe. And remember, there's a Monroe calculator for every conceivable application in almost any kind of business, from simple hand models to the ultra-sophistication of the electronic EPICs.

Alphas in our society but to those of Beta ability as well. It is long past the days when you could say in Britain that so long as we had a well-trained top cadre the rest did not matter so much. On the contrary – it matters enormously in Britain today that we should have high standards of professional performance right along the line.

Now, I want to come to the specific question which you have asked, 'Should the State play a part in training and education for the professions?' Well, the short answer must be 'Of course it should'. The idea that the State, that the Government machine, can stay right outside all this has only got to be stated for its fallacy to be apparent. I want to mention four respects in which, as I see it, the State has got to play a part – and an increasing part – in education and training for the professions.

Educational facilities

First of all there is the provision by the State of essential facilities. The professions cannot provide for themselves institutions of further education. The absolutely essential thing for the State to provide is technical college buildings, institute buildings, and indeed the progress of the professions is bound up with the public provisions both of capital facilities and, of course, of lecturers and courses as well.

I would remind you, however, that when we talk here about the State in Britain, one does not just mean the central government, but central government plus about 160 local education authorities. Education in Britain is a partner-ship between the centre and local education authorities, and taking the whole story in the last ten years the expansion of further education has been a creditable story both to successive Governments and to local education authorities as well.

Well, that is my first point about the State and the professions. The State has an essential function to perform in the provision of extra resources and whatever the state of our balance of payments, whatever the budgetary problems, I am quite sure that further education and the provision of these resources is going to continue to extend.

Training teachers

The second way in which the State is involved is this. The public authorities – central and local government – are themselves directly responsible for certain aspects of professional training, and here I am thinking especially of the training of teachers. There has been a rapid expansion of teacher training in the colleges of education.

A really remarkable feature of Britain in the sixties has been the rate of expansion from something like 28,000 students ten years ago to about 90,000 today, and I am satisfied that in the years ahead we shall also need increased provision for the in-service training of teachers. As the school curriculum changes, as we have more and more developments in science and technology, in mathematics and arts subjects, too, there will be an increasing need of courses for the in-service training of teachers, and this is one particular part of the field where I think the work of the courses will be very closely linked up with the work of the universities.

A third point I would make about the State and the professions, and this is really the most important of all. People often ask the question 'Should the State play a part in a way that assumes that the State is either right in or right out?'. Now that seems to me a completely unrealistic approach. I do not believe that this is the real choice. Of course the State is not going directly to run training for a large number of professions, but the State is going to be indirectly involved.

Then – my last point – I think today the State is involved in higher education to a greater extent than ever before and, of course, higher education is a spectrum. There are the universities; immediately below there are the degree courses; there are the Higher National Certificate and Diplomas; then below that the courses at less than sixth form level and the Ordinary National Certificates and Diplomas. Finally there are the certificated course in the colleges of education – you have this whole range of qualifications after school and the State, as I see it, must be concerned with the emerging pattern.

This leads to a point, I think, of real importance. I think the State may reasonably feel a little concerned if more and more professions start to couch their requirements too explicitly in terms of one qualification only, namely, a university degree. I do therefore very warmly commend your Institute in its determination for the future to work up to university degree standard, but not to spurn the alternative route through the Council for National Academic Awards.

I believe, personally, that the Council for National Academic Awards has an important role to play in this country as an alternative route for professional qualifications. Indeed, I would say that a course today in the universities and the polytechnics overlaps considerably in the range of ability for which they cater. But I think it is broadly true to say that the universities are essentially institutions of learning; they are not primarily institutions of professional training. The polytechnics are going to be more essentially institutions of professional and vocational training, although I agree the academic balance of their course is important too. But I very much hope you keep to your present plan of working up the qualifications to a degree standard but recognizing the existence of this very important alternative route through the Council for National Academic Awards. (Applause.)

QUESTIONS

Mr Judd: Thank you very much, Sir Edward. I am enormously relieved that you were good enough to say that you approved of the plans our Institute is making for the future.

There is an opportunity now to shoot any questions at Sir Edward.

Questioner: Would Sir Edward comment more specifically on the financial part the State is going to play in this? Is he backing the fact that we would like our correspondence courses paid for by a grant, or whether the State is prepared to give full-time post-graduate courses or even initiate sandwich courses at technical colleges for our qualifications?

Sir Edward Boyle: Well, now, when you ask what the State is prepared to do, we must keep the distinction of what is the responsibility of central government and what is the responsibility of local government. I think, so far as recognizing courses at correspondence colleges is concerned, the initiative here must come from local government. The Department of Education and Science does not deal with individual colleges; it is the local authorities and those on the spot who are best qualified to know what sort of correspondence courses are most worth taking.

Looking ahead to the future, it may well be that in the case of certain professional qualifications one cannot exclude altogether grants being made for this purpose, but the initiative first would have to come from the local end because these are the people who are immediately concerned.

Mr Judd: May I ask a question? I think we would all agree that the designated polytechnic type of training which is being aimed at our professional students does require that the teachers keep closely in touch with what is actually happening in professional and industrial work. Are there official arrangements for such teachers to have a sort of sabbatical year, or other means of going off and doing the job so they really understand what is involved?

Mr Emanuel Shinwell speaking. He felt that all the useful professions should be encouraged and added humorously that accountants were needed 'to stand up to those villains of the Inland Revenue'.

Sir Edward: I suspect that happens much less than it should, but it is a very good point. In other words, that inservice training of teachers should not only be, as it were, concerned with pumping facts and new curricula matters into them, but they should also be concerned with what is actually happening in the professional world. That is a very useful point and I shall certainly remember it when I am talking to those in polytechnics or in local authorities.

Questioner: I wonder if you could tell us whether you think that correspondence courses are adequate for our training? After all, this is a very important profession and correspondence courses have their limitations. I wonder if you could say something about that?

Sir Edward: Well, whether correspondence courses are adequate or not I would not presume to know – and indeed whether the students are always adequate, I would not know that either. They have in the past played a bigger part in your profession than many people outside have realized.

What caused me first to look at correspondence courses after the war was when I became interested in the South African Committee for Higher Education because such very exigous opportunities as there are for Africans to qualify for post-school qualifications in the Union depend in no small measure on correspondence courses from this country. That encouraged me to look into these courses, many of which are a good deal better than people realize, so I would not like to leave them out altogether and say they were by nature inadequate or inferior, though I think that some sort of grading of the colleges would be very desirable.

Mr Judd: We have had correspondence colleges all my life and I always understood them to be an early trial by fire to enable you to be a professional man the rest of your life. If you can teach yourself in your early twenties how to teach yourself, then you help yourself for the rest of your life.

MR EMANUEL SHINWELL

Of course, this question that has been asked of us can be answered immediately in the affirmative. We want to encourage all the useful professions in this country, whatever they may be – the medical profession, the teaching profession in particular – and I see no harm at all if we have a conglomeration – excuse the expression but it is the only one that occurs to me at the moment – of qualified chartered accountants able to stand up to those villains of the Inland Revenue. (Laughter.)

I answer the question in the affirmative, but I was surprised to hear Sir Edward making a speech on nationalization! (Laughter). Time and again we are told in the House of Commons and in the Press that the State should keep its hands out of matters of that sort. I reject that concept. I believe the State is bound to intervene. There was a time when it was unnecessary - in the sixteenth, seventeenth, eighteenth and part of the nineteenth century - when everything was left to private ownership and private enterprise, even in the sphere of education. But the State was compelled to step in and it did; perhaps not as effectively as it should have done but it made the effort, it made a beginning, and so we have State schools and there were grants to universities, and technical colleges were produced, and now we are in the arena of technological advance - all as a result, or a great part of it, of State intervention. So it must be. I see no objection at all to the State taking a part, and, indeed, a greater part in the training of people for the professions.

But the question which is asked over and over again, whether it is in the sphere of education, in the area of training or even as regards technological advance, the question is asked, 'Where is the money to come from?' There is the crux of the problem. I say at once, if money is to be found at all; if money is to be raised; if taxation is to be increased - we do not necessarily want increased taxation - then all that the State can possibly provide out of its finance and other resources should be devoted to education. Because we must not fail in education; we have failed in a great many things and it is doubtful whether we have a role in the world today other than as a moral force, as a cultural force and, in particular, as regards advancing Parliamentary democracy as a civilized nation, then it must be - if we are to retain that priority that was established in previous centuries - related to educational advance.

And so my answer to the question that is posed at this meeting is a simple one: I want the State to spend all the resources that can be made available for the purpose of training those who are to be qualified whether in the medical, the financial, or any other profession; and particularly, I say that as regards those who are responsible for training those who are seeking to become qualified.

The essential prerequisite of a proper qualification in any profession in this land of ours is that there should be effective and efficient training, and so let us spend money on the teachers to begin with – qualified teachers; and in the measure that we have qualified teachers, we will have qualified members of whatever profession it may be. (Applause.)

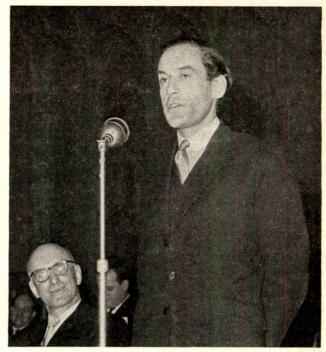

MR JEREMY THORPE

I share with Mr Shinwell the fact that I am not an educationalist and therefore I do not intend to approach this question from an educationalist point of view. I approach it from the standpoint of one who is a member of a profession, as a barrister – although I retired from practice seven or eight years ago.

Now I could talk about the role of the State as far as finance is concerned – whether the University Grants Committee accords sufficient independence to the universities; whether teachers' salaries should be a direct charge on the Exchequer and not to be met as at present by local authorities; whether we have under the State system the right priorities as between primary and secondary schools building and programming and further education. But I would much rather approach it from a constitutional viewpoint, as to what is the extent to which the State must intervene – ought to intervene – and whether the dividing line between academic and professional freedom ends with gross interference, if indeed that happens.

If you are talking about State intervention in regard to training and education, it follows by implication that this must be projected to the maintenance afterwards of professional standards. Now I react in two ways to the very important question which we are discussing. First, I distrust on grounds both of principle and experience the concentration of power – and especially the concentration of power in the hands of the State. But, secondly, I distrust again both on principle and experience the operation of restrictive practices by any body or organization, however well intentioned its founders may be.

But, if you would like to put it another way, I believe in the desirability of a plural society where patronage and power are diffused and, at the same time, you have a mobile society in which new talent and new ideas have the chance of breaking the crust of custom and the conservatism of professional establishments. There is no doubt that the State can provide the means for rapid progress of ability from the bottom to the top of the ladder, but while the State may over-ride social snobbery and professional pride, the extent of its power is such that it has an inevitable and inbuilt tendency to secure conformity.

Therefore I would say that a profession whose career structure and training is determined by the State will be a profession without the precious qualities of intellectual independence. But, on the other hand, the profession dominated by its own self-appointed and self-elected leaders will tend to be a profession lacking in initiative and sinking into inertia.

Examination by an outside body

How then are we to reconcile the need for independence with the desirability of efficiency? First I would like to commend a report of the Institute of Economic Affairs which was published in 1966 in which it was suggested that the qualifications and the requirements of the various professions should be registered with the Restrictive Practices Court. There is no doubt in my mind that the professions have a reputation for integrity, but that in my view is not enough if they are to be accorded the protection of maintaining their own professional standards, and therefore having the right to exclude those who do not measure up to their standards, or those who once having been admitted fall short of them. I think the examination and, if necessary, exposure by an independent body such as the Restrictive Practices Court of the conduct of the professions would enhance the confidence of the public in the professions themselves.

It seems to me that what is essential is, first, that the standards of professional integrity shall be maintained; and I think it is true to say that the standards of the professions in this country are as high as almost any in the world. Secondly, if they ask for certain protection - and in my own profession we are, for example, not able to be sued for negligence, however negligent we may have been in our advice - that any organization asking for any such privileges from the Government shall do so in the knowledge that those privileges depend upon the organizations themselves providing the services to the public, and they are only granted in order that those services shall be better supplied. That, thirdly, it is obviously of the essence that the State should be associated in order to help preserve those standards, and the State obviously again as an essential partner in assisting with the finance which may well be needed for professional organizations and, in particular, of course, for education.

But, I would hope that the greater independence of the professions, provided that they are outward looking and providing that they are able to serve the public and manifestly be seen to be doing so, then there can be a partnership between the two without impairing the independence of either. (Applause.)

QUESTIONS

Questioner: In view of the restrictions on funds which are available for education, especially at the present time, would the speakers say whether they might favour a scheme whereby when grants cannot be made available, loans in the form of advances could be made to students in the professions which would normally be repayable after they have obtained their qualifications and are in a position to do so?

Mr Shinwell: It would seem to me that there is no reason at all – if the State finds it impossible to provide the necessary finance in the way of grants, why loans should not be provided. After all we are providing loans – not only this Government but other governments have provided loans – free of interest for some countries overseas who are not all that friendly disposed, which indeed have severed diplomatic relations, and if I can use a cliché 'charity begins at home'. If there are young people who want to study in any particular profession and their parents find it difficult, even with grants provided by the State for their studies, I think there is no reason at all why the State should not provide loans; and if the proposition is put up to the Government, or is put up to some of us, I am quite sure we would be very ready to project it into the House of Commons.

Mr Thorpe: I would slightly disagree. If the alternative is a loan or nothing, then obviously a loan is preferable, but I would just make a couple of comments. I regard a grant as a form of investment – if you like, an investment grant as opposed to an investment loan – and I think it is very difficult to differentiate between who should get a grant and who should get a loan. One might say, 'I will try for a grant and if I do not get that I will have a shot at a loan.' But, whatever are the cuts in educational spending I think you will find that students' loans – apart from overseas students' grants – have not been severely cut back. Therefore I do not think the present cuts produce a radically different situation from that obtaining before the axe fell.

Questioner: Mr Shinwell, you did mention that you would like to see all the resources available for education spent on it, but you did not specify how you would like to see this done. I feel that if it were to be done in the way of a grant, I do not think that to make a grant for a correspondence course would necessarily solve the problem of getting more qualified accountants, or for that matter better qualified accountants; and if it is loans, in what way would you like to see this done?

Mr Shinwell: Of course, that is a problem I ventured to touch on in passing – the question of money. You can talk as much as you like about what you want, your aspirations and ambitions and demands. The question is how do you get the finance? And Governments are a bit sticky sometimes, particularly the Treasury. The Treasury always say 'No' when there is a question of getting money – but it depends on yourselves. If you want correspondence courses I see no reason why the State should not provide some measure of finance.

My answer is this, the State can make money available out of its resources but you cannot go on spending vast sums on defence, vast sums on this, vast sums on that, lending money abroad unnecessarily and have all the money you want for education. I know very little about the professions but I believe that education in the highest possible degree is essential if this country of ours is to remain the moral, intellectual and cultural force in the world – and that is what I want to see. (Applause.)

Questioner: Mr Shinwell replied to a question that it matters how many letters you have after your name – that is the measure of whether you are an educated person or not. My point is that State intervention in education or any other thing should be restricted to a certain degree. Here we may consider two things: the extent to which you want to educate the population and the basic education needed for becoming a good citizen, whereas when entering a profession he wants to choose a profession for his livelihood. Is it right, therefore, that the State should elect what profession one should choose?

Mr Shinwell: As I understand the point of the question, you can educate somebody for a particular profession but have got to start pretty early. There has got to be elementary education, secondary education, and so on, through the university, if university is at all possible. I do not care what profession it is, if one is to be highly qualified one must have had a thorough-going education to begin with. That is essential; you can't simply pitchfork somebody without prior education into a profession and expect him to be qualified. But there is something more than being qualified in a particular profession. There is something in integrity; there is something in behaviour; there is something in human understanding; there is something in making contacts with people; there is something, if I may use the expression, in being earthy, not to be superior. That is very important in this field of education and in any profession.

COMPANY REGISTRATION FEES The New Scale

The Board of Trade seeks to remind company secretaries and others responsible for submitting company returns to Companies House of the new scale of fees payable under the Companies Act 1967. They say that over four hundred returns per day are still being sent to Companies House with incorrect registration fees. These include not only returns with insufficient fees, but also returns accompanied by fees which are no longer required.

While full details of the scale of fees payable are contained in Schedule 3 of the Companies Act 1967, particular attention is drawn to the

LONDON INDUSTRIAL CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' GROUP

The chairman, Mr J. Sandford Smith, F.C.A., the honorary secretary, Mr R. J. Ogle, F.C.A., and members of the London Industrial Chartered Accountants' Group, entertained Sir Edmund Compton, K.C.B., K.B.E., Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration, at a luncheon at the Waldorf Hotel, London, on February 2nd.

SOUTH ESSEX SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

A whole-day course on computers for members of the profession both in practice and in industry is to be held by the South Essex Society of Chartered Accountants on March 8th, in the cinema at the Ford Motor Co Central Office, Eagle Way, Warley, Brentwood, Essex.

The course will include the planning and control of large-scale computer projects; use of third generation computers; a review of some advanced applications using operational research techniques, and continental data transmission networks. In addition, a typical computer installation will be demonstrated where multi-programming and random access devices will be seen in operation. An indication of future applications will be outlined, and anticipated results and problems discussed. The course, despite its advanced nature, is being designed for those who do not necessarily have computer experience.

The fee for the course, including lunch and other refreshments, is £3. Applications to attend, which must be made by February 26th, should be addressed to the secretary of the Society, Mr D. E. Heady, F.C.A., 187A South Street, Romford, Essex. Telephone: Romford 44728.

STUDENTS' DINNER IN LEEDS

A tremendous upheaval was now going on in the profession. This is how Mr A. R. Walton, B.COM., F.C.A., President of the Leeds Chartered Accountant Students' Society, centred attention on the integration proposals being considered by the leading accountancy bodies, at the Society's annual dinner on January 26th.

Responding to the toast of the Society, Mr Walton said: 'When you are serving articles time goes very quickly, and when you qualify the profession seems very much as it was when you entered articles. This is not likely to be true much longer. The profession cannot anyway continue in its present form if it is to survive!'

Mr Walton said that references had appeared in the professional Press about the proposals being worked out to integrate the main accountancy bodies in England and Wales, Scotland and Ireland. But for the time being taken by the Board of Trade and the Monopolies Commission in reviewing professional practices in the U.K., he said, the proposed scheme would by now have been put before the Institute's membership. But whatever the results of the proposals, Mr Walton went on: 'Ours will not be an easy profession in which to qualify'.

Proposing the toast, the Rt Rev. Eric Treacy, Bishop of Wakefield, said: 'I ask myself what we have in common, you and I. I think it is a matter of judgement. My firm is concerned with ultimate judgement; yours are concerned with immediate judgement'.

'Behind all the professional skills you may acquire there must be the power to judge character. But never become cynical about people. If you think well of people, I think on the whole they turn out well. I don't know, however, whether the Commissioner of Inland Revenue would bear me out in that.'

The toast of 'The Guests' was proposed by the honorary secretary of the Society, Mr F. C. Prust, and Mr J. D. Hamilton responded.

BRITISH COMPUTER SOCIETY Manchester and District Branch

The next meeting of the Manchester and District Branch of the British Computer Society will be held on February 14th at 6.30 p.m. in the Renold Building, University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology, when a talk will be given on 'The impact of computers on education', by Mr A. Daniels, head of education department, National Computer Centre.

RECORD EXPORTS, BUT RHODESIAN PROBLEMS CONTINUE

Points from the Statement by the Chairman, Mr R.M. Bateman

Direct exports exceed previous records

£15,256,000, representing 20% increase over past five years

Rhodesian situation creates financial and technical difficulties

Over £2m net profit lost annually; performance of asbestos manufacturing plants, deprived of Rhodesian fibre, adversely affected

Canadian asbestos developments

New £5m shaft at Bell Mine; increased investment in Cassiar Asbestos Corporation Ltd, which produces excellent fibres from two mines

Increased sales to third parties

£90,295,000, for companies whose accounts were consolidated, highest ever

Trading profit maintained with effort

Falling demand, increasing costs and pressure on margins, yet trading profit marginally up

Capital expansion in manufacturing plants New asbestos-cement plant opened in Northern Ireland; new plastics factory near Liverpool in production next April. Expansion financed by issue of £7 m Unsecured Loan Stock

R & D expenditure doubled in five years

Annual research and development expenditure now £2m, double that of five years ago; £2m new UK research facilities provided in same period

Overseas prospects

Excluding Rhodesia and Eastern Nigeria, overseas mining and manufacturing profits likely to be one-tenth lower this year, but devaluation likely to convert this into modest net sterling improvement in profits and dividends from overseas

Overall prospects

Immediate future very uncertain, but small improvement in total sterling profits possible for current year

Important contribution by personnel

Severe test, produced by economic factors, met with loyalty and determination by all concerned

Year ended 30 September	1967	1966
Sales to third parties	90,295,000	89,981,000
Trading profit	10,424,000	10,183,000
Profit before taxation	11,627,000	12,041,000
Profit after taxation	6,887,000	7,200,000
Dividends on ordinary stock (gross	6,858,000	6,858,000
Retained in the business	4,000	352,000
Fixed assets (net)	63,006,000	61,637,000
Current assets less liabilities	34,641,000	28,781,000

NOTE: The accounts of Rhodesian and Eastern Nigerian subsidiaries are excluded

DIVIDEND: Final dividend of 7% on Issued Ordinary Stock recommended, making, with $3\frac{3}{4}\%$ interim already paid, $10\frac{3}{4}\%$ this year as last

The Annual General Meeting will be held at the Chartered Accountants' Hall, Manchester, on 22 February 1968.

The full text of the Chairman's Statement has been circulated with the Report and Accounts, which contains a review of the activities of the principal home and overseas operating companies. Copies of these documents are available on application to The Secretary, 77-79 Fountain Street, Manchester 2.

It's because we've been first so often that we come second so often.

... never the blushing bride"

The Leicester Permanent is often a jump ahead. (When other societies were wondering about computers, we were installing one!)
You'd think that this progressive attitude would make us everybody's first choice.

Not so.

Naturally enough, many people make their first investment with their local society. Or the one with a branch nearby.

Or the one where they've known the manager for donkey's years.

But when they're looking for a good second string, they realise our reputation for being first must mean something!

Career Development in TAXATION

AGE 24-35

You are a qualified accountant or solicitor who has been specialising in taxation for the past year or two. Alternatively you may be a graduate ex-Inspector of Taxes who has continued to specialise in tax in the accountancy profession or in industry for at least two years. You feel you have reached the stage where in order to develop your career further you need to widen your experience by undertaking more demanding work.

We can offer posts in our Taxation Department, where you will receive a wide variety of experience of all types of tax work, including the handling of international tax problems, and where hardly a day passes without your being faced with some new problem. You will be encouraged to develop your talents in a variety of ways such as lecturing to outside bodies or contributing to technical journals. You will be given as much responsibility as you can handle and if you have the ability to manage, then promotion can follow in a very short time. If you have the right qualities and experience we will appoint you to a management position immediately. There are partnership prospects for the right men.

Please ring D. D'A. Martin for further information, or write to him (quoting reference A/119) with a brief résumé of your career, at Touche, Ross, Bailey & Smart, 3 London Wall Buildings, London EC2. Tel. 01–588 3678, Ext. 74.

Plan for Fiscal Lucidity

ATHREE-POINT plan to rationalize and simplify the U.K. tax system has been put to the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER in a letter from The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales. The first part of the letter (reproduced on another page), although couched in words of studied moderation, nevertheless constitutes a damning indictment of the way the nation's tax system has been complicated over the past few years.

Consider, for instance, the simple sale of a small piece of land. One department assesses the capital gain, if any, accruing (or deemed to accrue) to the seller on the footing of a purely notional calculation based on current use values at different times. Then another department computes, by means of other and even more complex notions, the development value which has been realized or is deemed to have been realized. Two separate and highly-complicated tax codes thus have to be applied by two distinct and geographically separated groups of officials.

But, of course, it is not enough to criticize. The question is what is to be done. It seems to us that the plan put forward by the Institute makes a very powerful case for itself. The Government should either adopt it or give detailed reasons why not.

The announced intention of the Government to achieve, but only by 1970, a mere consolidation of income tax and corporation tax law is not nearly an answer to the demand made on all sides for the simplification of the tax system as a whole. Even if all the direct tax legislation were consolidated it would still not be enough, even if this should be accomplished by 1970. We endorse the suggestion that a select committee of the House of Commons be set up and charged with the task of immediate simplification.

As for the Institute's second proposal, for the earlier publication of draft legislation, it is certainly high time that the detailed provisions, as opposed to rates of tax, were subjected to longer and keener scrutiny than they receive now. The Land Commission Act 1967 which lays down the broad basis of betterment levy nowhere gives the rate of levy. Prior to the introduction of capital gains tax in April 1965 some advance information was given by the CHANCELLOR, but in the barest terms. It would have been much better if the text of the proposed legislation had been disclosed, without necessarily disclosing the rate of the tax.

As soon as the text of proposed fiscal measures is published then the Institute's third recommendation should operate, namely, that it should be examined by a select committee of Parliament which would take evidence from experts and the public at large.

Three in the High Street?

THE bankers must be pondering the unpredictability of their environment. A few brief weeks ago there seemed to be a widely held view that five banks in the High Street were too many for optimum efficiency. Now opinion seems to be building up that three may be too few.

If the Monopolies Commission recommends against the Barclays-Lloyds-Martins merger which last week seemed to make more headlines than devaluation, then four must for the present be the minimum number of High Street bankers – unless, of course, the Commission recommends merely the omission of Martins from the mix. For if Barclays-Lloyds is too big, then so would be Lloyds-Midland, and so certainly would be the association of the weeks-old National Provincial-Westminster with any of the other three. One wonders whether the Prices and Incomes Board looked to the subtraction of only one from five when they reported as recently as last May:

'Further amalgamations among the banks, carried through to the appropriate point, could permit some rationalization of existing networks. The Bank of England and the Treasury have made it plain to us that they would not obstruct such further amalgamations if the banks were willing to contemplate such a development; and we think that a further reduction in the number of independent banking units would not necessarily affect very significantly the degree of competition.'

The High Street situation is, in fact, a substantial part of the case for amalgamation. Not, indeed, that there is likely to be any great number of branch closures at a time when the business of all the banks is growing so fast. But over even quite a short term there can be substantial economies in branch opening and branch enlargements – more substantial, perhaps, than the computer economies that have figured so largely in Press comment since National Provincial-Westminster broke the dam.

The reverse of the medal is obviously that 'five', the magic number for so many years, must not be reduced ad absurdum. Make it one, and the effect in the High Street would be lamentable. Would two be bearable? Maybe; but three, with none of them holding (quite) half the market, is much better.

The Monopolies Commission will have some complicated evidence submitted to it, ranging a good deal further than any bank or any High Street, most of it the common ground of all merger proposals, but presented now at a time when some commentators think we have all gone merger mad. There is the need for larger units to meet overseas competition (especially, in the case of the banks, that of the American banks thrusting into London and the Euro-dollar market). There is the need for larger units to serve the larger units that are their customers—larger banks to provide the finance needed by the products of mergers everywhere else. This latter factor was the motive force throughout the long development from one-town sixpartner banks to today's branch banking systems.

It is just fifty years since the Big Five took shape, in the culmination of a series of take-overs that stands comparison with anything around us now. The long process of amalgamation that reduced hundreds of banks to Five (plus the 'Smaller Six') is comparable with today's events only in its final stages when the mergers were between large banks and produced giants. To consider only the topical triumvirate, Barclays took London, Provincial and South Western, Lloyds took Capital and Counties, and Bank of Liverpool took Martins (and eventually assumed the latter's name).

The 1918 developments produced the same kind of alarm that we are now seeing repeated, and a Treasury committee in due course recommended that no further large groupings should be permitted. Thereafter the Big Five confined themselves to picking up unconsidered trifles, with the comparatively recent acquisition of District by National Provincial as the largest to date. Then came the P.I.B. report—a surprise (in this respect) to the banks, or so we have been assured. The two smallest of the Big Five recovered from their surprise first. And now the second initiative goes to the Monopolies Commission.

It seems unlikely that the Commission will close the book at the Big Four; reference to it would indeed have seemed more reasonable—and more urgent—had it followed an attempt to reduce Three to Two. But there are still some interesting possibilities ahead. Some Press comment has urged Midland to snatch Martins from the new line-up—a suggestion that would doubtless be supported by Martins' shareholders. There has been pressure for disclosure by the merging banks, so that their shareholders could judge for themselves whether they are fairly treated. Lloyds might be told to shed their interest in the National Commercial Bank of Scotland. Midland may be looking at the National Commercial-Royal-Williams Deacon's-Glyn group, predominantly Scottish though it is. The permutations are not yet exhausted.

And assuming that the latest proposal goes forward to implementation, there follows the hard part: getting real rationalization out of these very large banks—well, fairly large—we mustn't get things out of proportion. Three American banks will still be larger even than Barclays-Lloyds-Martins, albeit with many fewer than their 5,500 branches.

Management and the Computer

T would not be an exaggeration to say that today we are on the threshold of a two-fold revolution which will have a dramatic effect upon the management of businesses and related organizations — a revolution in management techniques and a second revolution in computer technology and application.

Although in one sense they may be regarded separately, there are significant interrelationships between the two – the development of major management systems will depend upon computers to provide the capability of handling the volume of data and applying the appropriate analytical and evaluation techniques; the exploitation of the computer potential depends upon the ability of management to adapt itself to a changed environment and to organize itself so as to utilize such techniques.

At this relatively short distance of time since the first stumbling steps were taken in the use of computers in business, it may be strange to be talking about a second computer revolution. However, the interaction between the increasing mathematical basis of management and the technological improvements of the computer itself has brought us to the stage where there will be a rapid transition from using computers for individual applications to fully integrated systems, not only within individual firms but between firms and on a regional and national basis.

The current rate of change should not be underestimated. It is said that the sum of human knowledge is doubling every ten years and the pace of change is quickening. For the young executive now starting to mount the ladder of management, this will pose formidable problems. No longer will the person qualifying in his chosen profession be technically equipped for the remainder of his career; instead he will need to undergo retraining at intervals if he is to stay in the main stream of progress and technological development.

This is particularly true of the accountant who traditionally has been the source of data processing within the business. This role is challenged by the emergence over the last two decades of the computer and its related specialisms. Prospects for the accountant entering the profession today are vastly different from what they were twenty years ago, and it will only be by coming to terms with both the computer and the growth of more scientifically-based management techniques that he will be able to maintain his relative standing in the business world.

This week was therefore a particularly opportune time for the publication of The computer as an aid to management, by Dudley W. Hooper, M.A., F.C.A., the eighth and concluding title in the series of Management Information booklets published by The General Educational Trust of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales – the opportune and welcome appearance of this booklet being marred only by the untimely death of its writer who, formerly as Chief Organizing Accountant of the National Coal Board was responsible for the Board's computer installations, and latterly as Technical Officer of the Institute, was a leading authority on the computer and its potentialities.

The first two chapters are devoted to an outline of the potential uses of the computer and to a schematic outline of the computer system. The small space given to the description of the computer itself follows the trend of taking the computer as an accepted tool and concentrating upon the ways of using it to the best advantage.

The next six chapters describe the major contributions of the computer to the function of management. First, the overall decisions on objectives and the means of achieving those objectives; then, the establishment of long-term and short-term budgets; the breakdown of short-term budgets to specific operational areas follows, going on to the feed-back of operational information against established budgets for control purposes; and finally, the appropriate selection of information for retrieval and use in ad hoc decision-

It is, perhaps, a measure of the changing attitude of the profession that a book dealing with computers as an aid to management and written with the accountant in mind should use as its starting-point the decisions regarding the use of resources for the optimization of profit, which are dependent upon and result from the definition of objectives by top management. It is becoming widely recognized – particularly in the making - in particular, to provide the basic data for decision models.

U.S.A. – that this process is the keystone of decision-making at all levels.

February 17th, 1968

The author has brought out quite clearly the part that the computer system can play in refining and quantifying the alternatives that are open to management and which, by a process of selection and testing, enable management to choose between alternatives based upon quantified data and assessed probabilities.

The remaining chapters deal with the planning of the computer installation, control of computer operations, and the expanding range of external services and computer networks which exist or are likely to exist in the near future.

The booklet concludes with an examination of the accountant's role in this changing world. Financial records are becoming a minor by-product of a management information system rather than vice versa. In this change there is a significant pointer for the profession.

Revenue Report

EVERY year the Inland Revenue annual report grows bigger and that just published (Cmnd 3508, H.M.S.O., price 32s) for the year ended March 31st, 1967, is no exception.

For the first time there are statistics relating to the long-term capital gains tax introduced in April 1965. The amount of tax actually collected during 1966-67, which would be entirely confined to gains accruing in the year ended April 5th, 1966, was under £7½ million. By far the greater part of this must have been collected late in the year, as becomes manifest from a table showing what assessments had been made up to August 31st, 1966.

These assessments were for a total of £1,696,000 in terms of tax, including the 35 per cent tax charged on companies' capital gains. Many of these assessments must have been the subject of appeal procedure, and it is evident that the actual collections up to the end of August 1966 (one-third of the way through the year), were little, if any, more than £1 million. So there must have been quite a spurt after that. Assessments up to the end of August 1966 numbered 11,460. Of these, 301 were on companies, 3,864 were at a rate of 30 per cent on individuals, while the great majority -7,295 — were made on individuals on the alternative basis of a rate lower than 30 per cent. Nearly half the total assessments were on gains not exceeding £50, producing a total tax charge of only £23,000. This represents a bare £5 for each assessment.

The time spent in computing such tiny assessments must have been far more valuable than the tax produced (assuming that it is ever paid). From the beginning, informed people have been arguing that there should be an annual exemption figure for small gains, and the new statistics bear this out. During the year 1966-67 there had to be no less than 5,096 valuations for capital gains tax purposes. These produced an aggregate value of £63 million, which contrasts remarkably with the amount of the gains. In a great many cases the mere cost of valuation probably exceeded the net gain.

The usual list of new or discontinued extra-statutory-concessions is missing this year, the change being attributable to the fact that the task of including up-to-date detail of concessions often delayed publication of the report. The Board has accordingly decided to issue a separate (free) annual booklet of concessions. The current one issued last December gives the concessions existing not, as one might expect, on December 31st, 1967, but on December 31st, 1966.

The annual report contains an excellent nine-page table showing the separate rates of stamp duties updated to August 1st, 1967, when the most recent changes came into force. This table would also be more useful if published as a separate pamphlet.

The report mentions that two booklets have been revised; that on capital allowances and the explanatory notes on surtax. The two loose-leaf volumes, Income Taxes in the Commonwealth and Income Taxes outside the Commonwealth, which the Inland Revenue have kept up to date until recently, have now been discontinued. In their place are eight paper-back volumes of Income Tax outside the United Kingdom, containing summaries of the taxation in force on December 31st, 1966, in the eighty-two countries included in the former binders. The intention is that these eight volumes will be replaced each year by completely new volumes, which will certainly add to the cost of keeping up to date. However, the new volumes do avoid the disadvantage of the loose-leaf binders, which needed a heavy weight to keep them open at the desired page.

An interesting half-page in the report refers to automation in the department. The work of centralizing P.A.Y.E. went on throughout the year. Towards the end of 1967 an I.C.T. computer system was installed at Centre 1 in East Kilbride, Scotland, which is due to come into operation about the middle of 1968. Sites have been selected for Centre 2 in Bootle, Lancashire, and for Centre 3 in Llanishen, near Cardiff. Preliminary construction work on these two centres, each of which will employ 2,000 staff when fully operative, is to begin in 1967–68. Another centre, in Manchester, will probably come into operation in 1974 and will be the first of two required for P.A.Y.E. work for the London area. When fully established in 1976 this centre will employ some 3,000 staff. Study groups are examining the possibility of further mechanization.

Let no one think, however, that the computers are reducing the total staff of the department which, at the end of the year, had gone up from 59,518 to 62,700. The biggest increase, as might be expected, was in the Chief Inspector's Branch (2,224), with the Valuation Office in second place at 528. The cost of collection was slightly down: 1.37 per cent as against 1.39 per cent in 1965-66.

Of the 341 pages of the report, no less than 129 are devoted to extensive statistical surveys of personal incomes in 1964–65 and 1965–66, with some corrections of the figures previously published for the earlier year. There are, of course, the usual fascinating statistics showing how many apparently very wealthy people there are, and how the number increased despite heavy taxation; although no doubt the progressive decline in the value of money is itself the most potent factor in this movement.

Parliament and Fiscal Administration

The Institute's Letter to the Chancellor

The following is the text of a letter, released this week, which has been sent by the President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Dear Chancellor,

Members present at the 1967 annual meeting of this Institute, after stressing that it was not a political issue, passed by an overwhelming majority a resolution 'that the simplification of the tax legislation is a matter of the greatest urgency in the interests of the accountancy profession and the community as a whole and should be pressed for with all the authority the Council can command'. In support of the views of the Institute's membership, the Council of the Institute wishes to bring the following points to your attention.

During recent years Governments have added to the complexity of tax legislation by introducing fiscal changes on an unprecedented scale. Amongst the major innovations with which this letter is mainly concerned may be numbered corporation tax, capital gains tax, selective employment tax, betterment levy, and investment grants.

The economic and social aims of fiscal legislation are dictated by the policy of the Government of the day and are matters on which it is not the practice of the Council of this Institute to comment. But the form legislation takes, the language in which it is expressed, its intelligibility and practical working are matters outside the scope of politics; these are the matters with which we are concerned in this letter.

The fiscal measures referred to have largely been superimposed on existing and already complex legislation. They have been notable, in varying degrees, for such characteristics as intricacy of form, obscurity of language, uncertainty of meaning and administrative cumbrousness. The task of coping with them has placed a grave burden and handicap on the economy. Not only Government departments, but industry and commerce, the accounting and legal professions and others concerned, have all had to deploy and train the necessary staff. Even so business decisions continue to be hampered by uncertainty as to fiscal consequences. The total cost in terms of time, effort and skilled manpower diverted from productive activity is incalculable but must be enormous.

The weight of new measures has unquestionably had a dismaying effect for a combination of reasons. One is the confusing array of Government departments now responsible for administering different fiscal provisions, which makes the system seem even more complicated than it is, and adds to the problems of the taxpaying sector in dealing with it. The fiscal system has taken on a confused and fragmented aspect. From an impartial professional point of view its planning and management have been unconvincing.

There have been signs that inadequate time has been allowed for preliminary planning and preparation before new Bills are introduced, witnessed by such matters as the unnecessary complexity and obscure terminology already referred to and sometimes the introduction of extensive new provisions as afterthoughts at a late stage; the legal profession itself has been driven to protest at the involved draftsmanship. Sometimes there has been too little regard for ensuing complications and for the administrative and cost implications, not only for the departments concerned, but for the taxpaying sector.

Parliament has not always had adequate opportunity to scrutinize new fiscal legislation in necessary detail. Despite its formidable length and complexity, the 1965 Finance Bill which introduced corporation tax and capital gains tax had to follow the stringent timetable to which all Finance Bills are subject. It has been estimated that about a third of the Bill was not debated. At the other extreme, the 1966 Industrial Development Act was kept brief by the device of delegating extraordinary administrative powers to a department of state at the cost of removing most of the operating detail from the scope of parliamentary scrutiny.

Due economy of operation of some measures seems to be limited by their elaborate form – arguably, for instance, capital gains tax, selective employment tax and investment grants. It should be recalled that a great part of the burden of administering fiscal legislation is borne by the taxpaying sector itself, though no attempt is made to bring such costs into account in official estimates. We believe these hidden costs are one of the aspects of fiscal administration which Parliament should not ignore.

The factors referred to have contributed to a sense of disillusion with fiscal management and the effectiveness of Parliament's power to scrutinize and control it. The extent of demoralization and its consequences cannot be measured but should not be underrated.

In the Council's view it is urgently necessary to rationalize the fiscal structure and simplify the legislation. The proper body to undertake this task is Parliament. The following programme is proposed.

1. Priority for fiscal improvement

Immediate steps should be taken to overhaul and improve the intelligibility and working of the fiscal system. The Government's announced intention to consolidate the income tax and corporation tax legislation by 1970 is a welcome move in the right direction. But more than consolidation of these Acts is needed. The whole fiscal structure should be rationalized and integrated so as to make administration simpler, more efficient and more economic. At the same time the legislation should be examined with a view to the removal of anomalies and uncertainties in meaning; where necessary substantial redrafting to clarify should be undertaken. We believe this review should be undertaken by a select committee of Parliament, modelled broadly on the Public Accounts or Estimates Committees, with power to summon witnesses and hear evidence from Government departments, representative bodies and independent experts, and with power to recommend to the Government the changes it judges necessary. The Council of this Institute would give all the help in its power to such a review. In the meantime every effort should be made to avoid piling fresh complexities on the existing structure.

2. Earlier publication of the text of major Bills of a fiscal nature

The traditional practice of introducing major new fiscal measures following the April Budget speech, and the stringent programme that requires them to be law by August, has already been modified in a number of respects and should now be ended. Ample notice of proposed major changes in the tax structure should be given and the text of relevant Bills published some months before second reading. The experience of some other countries shows that there are ways of giving longer exposure at least of the structure of new fiscal proposals without damaging consequences. Longer exposure would enable the full implications, including administrative implications, of new measures to be properly studied and assessed, and necessary amendments and modifications made before enactment.

3. Select Parliamentary committee to examine new fiscal measures

A select Parliamentary committee with powers akin to the present Estimates and Public Accounts Committees should be set up to inquire into new fiscal proposals, within the confines of policy, as soon as the text of the Bill, as proposed above, is published. The committee should have power to summon witnesses, hear evidence and make recommendations for amendment of the Bill, which would be taken into account as deemed necessary by the Government before presentation of the Bill to Parliament for formal debate in the normal way.

There is nothing revolutionary in these proposals. They will maintain the right and duty of Parliament to scrutinize proposed new legislation, but will give an added dimension to it. By early exposure of a major Bill to a select committee it will be possible for Parliament to assess, within the confines of policy, the stated social and economic aims of the measure and to determine whether the means chosen for achieving them are intelligible, fair, workable and economic. Fiscal policy will continue to be determined by the Government and the main political issues will remain for Parliamentary debate in the normal way. But the shape and intelligibility of the legislation should be greatly improved.

Yours sincerely,

W. E. PARKER

President.

Current Affairs

Institute's New Council Members

R BRIAN ALFRED MAYNARD, M.A., F.C.A., a.C.W.A., and Mr Cecil Charlton Taylor, F.C.A., were elected to the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales at a meeting of the Council of the Institute held on Wednesday of last week (referred to on other pages in this issue). They fill the vacancies arising from the resignations of Mr E. N. Macdonald, D.F.C., F.C.A., and Mr S. John Pears, F.C.A.

Mr Maynard is a partner in Cooper Brothers & Co, Chartered Accountants, of London. He was articled to the firm in 1935, but broke his articles in 1936 to take an honours degree in economics and law at Cambridge. He served as an officer in the R.N.V.R. during the Second World War, initially in minesweepers and later as a flag lieutenant and on large combined staffs.

Mr Maynard returned to Cooper Brothers in 1946 and was admitted to membership of the Institute in 1947. After attending the Administrative Staff College at Henley and spending a year with the associated firm in East Africa, he was made a partner in 1950. Three years later, he was admitted to membership of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

Elected to the committee of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants in 1959, he acted as chairman of its conference on 'Information for management' in 1962, which was the first conference of accountants at which a computerized management game was played. He was chairman of the Society for the year 1966–67.

Mr Maynard is a member of the Institute's Courses and Examinations Committees and in this connection has been keenly interested in the development of the Certificate in Management Information. His appointments outside Institute affairs and the profession include membership of the Council of both the Institute of Management Consultants and the Management Consultants Association, of the Advisory Council of the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme, and of the Oxford University Appointments Committee.

Mr Taylor, who is a partner in the firm of Wilson, de Zouche & Mackenzie, Chartered Accountants, of Liverpool, was educated at Uppingham School and was articled in 1934 to Mr R. C. de Zouche, F.C.A., of his present firm. He was awarded the Alan Cookson Prize of the Liverpool Chartered Accountant Students' Association following the May 1939 Final examination and was admitted to membership of the Institute in July of the same year. Mr Taylor served throughout the Second World War in the Royal Army Service Corps, mainly overseas, rising to the rank of major.

On demobilization in 1945 he returned to accountancy, becoming a partner in his present firm in December of the same year. President of the Liverpool Chartered Accountant Students' Association in 1950–51, Mr Taylor was elected to the committee of the Liverpool Society of Chartered Accountants in 1951 and was President of the Society in 1957–58.

He was a group leader at the Institute's Oxford Summer Courses for three consecutive years – 1951 to 1953 – and again in 1960. At the 1954 Summer Course he gave a paper on 'Auditing' and at the Institute's auditing pilot course held in London in November 1966 he gave an address on 'Special problems in the audit of the smaller business'. Mr Taylor has been a member of the Liverpool Regional Technical Advisory Committee from 1952 to date and its chairman since 1962. He was a member of the main Technical Advisory Committee from 1963 to 1965.

Mr Taylor was a Justice of the Peace for the City of Liverpool from 1952 to 1965, and Commissioner of Income Tax for Liverpool from 1961 to 1965. He has also served on the executive committee of the Liverpool Council of Social Service from 1965 to date and is a director of a number of companies.

Accounting for Devaluation

As we said in our review of the profession at the end of 1967, a year already fast receding in time although the aftermath of some of its happenings are still very much with us, a short announcement from the Treasury on a gloomy Saturday evening in November was sufficient to expose the frailties of balance sheets based on currencies suddenly found to be imperfectly equated. Since devaluation, many practising accountants and company secretaries have been much occupied in making adjustments in the financial accounts of companies with foreign assets and liabilities in various forms, and to help them the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has just issued a recommendation (reproduced elsewhere in this issue) dealing with the general principles involved.

Drafted with the care and lucidity expected of this notable series, the recommendation distinguishes first between normal exchange fluctuations and differences caused by major 'permanent' changes in currency parities. The former, being a familiar everyday occurrence, presents no problems but the upheaval caused by devaluation is a different matter. Broadly, the loss or gain may be arrived at by converting overseas assets and liabilities at the date the rate changes at both the old and new rates and subtracting one total from the other. There is, however, no fixed formula to cover all cases and the Council points out the variations which may occur.

The recommendation goes on to deal first with the overseas transactions of United Kingdom companies not involving branches or subsidiaries and, secondly, with those of United Kingdom companies with branches or subsidiaries. Here again, circumstances alter cases and the Council considers in detail the categories of assets and liabilities involved, the nature of the transactions as between capital and revenue, and the methods of conversion to be used. In an appendix both the 'closing rate' and the 'historic rate' methods are defined and discussed.

Finally the Council, after a note on the effect of major changes in currency parities after the end of a financial period but before the accounts for that period are completed, lists five recommendations the most important of which are that exceptional gains or losses caused by devaluation should normally be brought into the accounting period to which they relate; that the gain or loss so computed should, if material, be shown separately either above or below the line in the profit and loss account or by adjusting the reserves in the balance sheet depending on the circumstances; that disclosure must be made where the effect is substantial; and that, normally, the effect of any post-balance sheet date change in currency parities should not be reflected in the accounts to the date of the balance sheet.

P.D. Leake Teaching Fellowships

THREE new awards of P. D. Leake Teaching Fellowships have now been announced and are made to Mr B. G. Harrison, F.C.A., of Birmingham, Mr R. J. Lister, M.A., A.C.A., A.T.I.I., of Manchester, and Mr J. Liversidge, F.C.A., of Leeds. The purpose of the fellowships is to enable those interested in teaching as a career to study for a higher degree and to help remedy in some measure the shortage of teachers in accounting.

Mr Harrison, whose fellowship will be tenable at the University of Aston, Birmingham, was admitted to membership of the former Society of Incorporated Accountants in 1955. He has been a lecturer in business administration at the City of Birmingham College of Commerce since 1964.

Mr Lister, who was admitted to membership of the Institute in 1963, took his M.A. degree at Oxford in 1965, since which time he has been with Cooper Brothers & Co, of Manchester. An associate of The Institute of Taxation, he will take up a fellowship at the University of Salford.

Mr Liversidge, who is to take up a fellowship at the University of Bradford, has been senior lecturer in accounting and taxation at the Leeds College of Commerce since 1963. Admitted to membership of the Institute in 1957, he gained in the Final examination the First Certificate of Merit, the Institute Prize, the W. B. Peat Medal and Prize, the William Quilter Prize and the Plender Prize for the Paper on Advanced Accounting Part I.

London Rate Equalization

THE announcement by the Minister of Housing and Local Government that the rate equalization scheme for Greater London, put forward by the London Boroughs Association, is to be implemented in stages from 1968–69, is to be welcomed. The existing scheme started in 1965 is grossly unfair. It verges on the farcical when a situation is reached that two of the wealthiest authorities in England and Wales are being subsidized by boroughs such as Lewisham and Wandsworth.

The Minister has accepted the proposals with 'some misgivings'. He proposes, therefore, that while the scheme should begin to take effect from 1968–69, there should be transitional provisions whereby it does not operate in full until 1971–72. The Minister proposes that a committee should be set up comprising his department and the G.L.C. and City of London representatives, to consider whether amendments are practicable or whether a new scheme altogether might be prepared for the future. His misgivings presumably arise from the fact that the sharpest impact of the transition from 1965 to the new scheme will affect, in particular, Tower Hamlets and, to a lesser extent, Southwark.

It would have been fairer to the author of the scheme, Professor A. R. Ilersic, if the Minister had made it clear that Solomon himself could not have devised a scheme which would have met with the approval of all thirty-two boroughs and the City. It was, after all, the inability to agree among themselves which finally led the members of the London Boroughs Association to invite Professor Ilersic to prepare this scheme. Furthermore, the scheme as devised constitutes an integrated package and it is unlikely that minor changes could be made to ameliorate the problems of the City, Tower Hamlets and Southwark without affecting other aspects.

It would seem that the Minister's misgivings arise not so much because of the limitations of Professor Ilersic's scheme but because, under the existing arrangements, the above boroughs have done so extraordinarily well. It was inevitable, therefore, that on any change to a more just and equitable basis, the major beneficiaries of the old scheme would find themselves in less favourable circumstances.

Savings and Insurance

THE main characteristic of 1967 in the savings world has been the acceleration of the flight out of money. Such is the opening statement in the current issue of *Planned Savings*¹ and, as the journal remarks, with the Trustee Savings Banks now entering the unit trust field, 'few defenders of the conventional savings media remain'.

The implications of this development, argues the journal, are for an extension of equity-listed contracts by insurance companies, who have experienced a decline in the proportion of new business made up of savings policies. The public is turning increasingly to term insurance and putting its savings into unit trusts. This development, it is noted, must start to make very considerable inroads on the sale of conventional with-profits endowment policies.

The journal comments on the fact that section 22, Finance Act 1956, self-employed deferred annuities have not proved attractive on the grounds that they do not 'offer good value for money'. Any non-surtax payer would do as well to take out a with-profits endowment assurance, on the grounds that the conventional offices are 'offering less than competitive rates for retirement annuity contracts', and it is suggested that anyone wishing to effect a contract of this type should buy an equity-linked policy.

The publishers of Planned Savings announce their intention to provide a similar survey of trusts and equity-linked life assurance.

by An Industrious Accountant

LAST Saturday morning I introduced my current problem to the little group of accountants who are wont to foregather over a cup of coffee. With a non-chalance that covered a cunning design, I sought to pick the best (we assume) professional brains in the town. I'd been wondering, I proffered casually, how to assess board meeting performances efficiency-wise. My own directors, I hinted, were generally in the mental giant category, of course, but an accurate yardstick to measure their calibre would be of interest.

My colleagues regarded me with coldly sapient eyes and nodded profoundly to one another. 'He's up to something again; you can tell it a mile off', observed the junior partner in our firm of auditors suspiciously. 'Probably got into some jam and wants a helping hand.'

The senior partner, now ageing and becoming cantankerous, said that these chaps who'd 'left the profession' would do well to stick to balance sheets and not get involved in psychological fiddle-faddle outside an accountant's scope. Get the gross profit percentage right and don't worry about directors; half of them only work on animal instinct, he advised sourly.

The youngest member of the group has the modern approach – study of emotional motivations of all human relationships is an essential for progressive accountants nowadays, he argued. No man is an island. Learn what makes directors tick. Is it greed, or ambition, or family involvement?

The junior partner interrupted to say that obviously the quicker decisions were reached, the more dynamic the executives engaged. 'If they defer a lot of simple decisions then they can't make up their minds basically, or else, of course, you haven't briefed them properly in advance. Give 'em all the facts and demand an answer, that's the ticket.'

The senior partner disagreed. 'In my opinion', he announced, 'you've misunderstood the role of directors completely. Their place is to lay down broad lines of policy which management, being the men on the spot who know the details, will subsequently implement. Don't give them cash flows or bar charts. Tell them, for example, that you need a computer and if they agree then just go out and buy one. No long-winded nonsense about it'.

We got deeper into controversy then, but there were still too many generalizations and one of the fundamental points missed was that directors might well have a different criterion of success from that of their managers. I remembered a time, for example, when I presented the board with a report on desirable improvements to our pension scheme. It was a good report, clear, well-costed, accurate, with comparative data graphed succinctly. It was rejected.

The rejection was a set-back so far as I and most of our staff were concerned. From the board's viewpoint, however, the cost of the additional benefits recommended was higher than they were prepared to undertake. They viewed the new scheme from a diametrically opposite angle. To get two of the improvements accepted a year or so later, as in fact I did, was a worthwhile yardstick of success in retrospect.

Anyhow, we adjourned still in disagreement, to pick up our wives at the supermarket, so its doubtful if our own meeting could be regarded as successful, efficiency-wise, in the absence of any decisions at all.

Premiums, Leases and Taxation

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

THE Finance Act 1963 introduced a scheme whereby property owners became chargeable to income tax in respect of certain transactions, in particular those yielding a premium for the grant of a lease. As a corollary, relief was made available to the lessees.

In this context 'lease' includes an agreement for a lease and any tenancy but not a mortgage or heritable security. The expression 'letting' is to be construed accordingly. The owner who grants a lease is termed the 'lessor' and the person in whose favour the lease runs is the 'lessee', both these descriptions being used here as inclusive of their successors in title.

The principal type of leases reviewed are 'short' leases, that is, those of which the duration does not exceed fifty years. In measuring duration a lease is not to be treated as granted for a term (in Scotland 'period') longer than one ending at the earliest date on which it could be determined by notice in cases where the terms of the lease include provision for determination by notice given either by the landlord or by a tenant.

Furthermore, where the duration of a lease falls to be ascertained after a date on which the lease has for any reason come to an end, the duration is to be taken to have extended from its commencement to that date. Where the duration has to be decided at a time when the lease is subsisting, the rule as to determination by notice is applied in conjunction with a further rule which limits the terminal date to the point of time beyond which any of the terms of the lease, whether relating to forfeiture or to any other matter, or any other circumstances render it unlikely that the lease will continue.

Meaning of premium

Again the term 'premium' includes any like sum, whether payable to the immediate or a superior land-lord. In the context of Scottish law 'premium' includes in particular a grassum payable, on the creation of a sublease, to any landlord or intermediate landlord, the latter expression (where an occupying lessee is a sublessee) meaning any person for the time being holding the interest of landlord under a sublease which comprises the property of which the occupying lessee is sublessee. Moreover any sum, other than rent, paid on or in connection with the granting of a tenancy is to be presumed to have been paid by way of premium except in so far as other sufficient consideration for the payment is shown to have been given.

The simplest case (designated for convenience as class 221) is that where the payment of a premium is required under a short lease or otherwise under the terms subject to which the lease is granted. However, subject to the exception noted below for class 224, no income tax liability or relief arises in relation to a lease granted or to an estate or interest in land sold before April 6th, 1963, or in pursuance of a contract entered into before April 4th, 1963.

In computing the charge the first step is to deduct any betterment levy charged on the premium and for this purpose paragraph I (4) of Schedule 15 to the Finance Act 1967 fixed the deduction as the principal amount of the betterment levy under Case B charged in respect of the grant of the lease or, if less, the amount obtained by applying to it a prescribed fraction. This fraction is the ratio of the capital value of the premium payable to the landlord as compared with the aggregate amount of consideration as computed for the purposes of charging betterment levy.

Betterment levy: Case B

The case distinguished as B is that where land is disposed of after April 5th, 1967, by a disposition granting a tenancy for a term of years certain of not less than seven years or one for a shorter period if 'notified' (see below). The creation of a tenancy by a tenancy agreement or an agreement for a lease is to be treated for levy purposes as a grant of that tenancy by the landlord.

Again, in determining whether a term of years specified in a disposition granting, renewing or extending a tenancy is a term of less, or not less, than seven years, the fact that the tenancy is, or may become, terminable by notice (given by either landlord or tenant) or by reentry, forfeiture or otherwise before the end of the specified term is to be disregarded and any specified term of years is to be taken as certain notwithstanding the foregoing possibilities.

'Notification' is optional at the instance of the grantee alone, whose incentive to act stems from the possible advantageous utilization on a later occasion of the consideration moving from him when considering base values under Schedule 5 of the Land Commission Act 1967. The particulars required of the grantee who desires to avail himself of this right of election under regulation 3 (3) of the Betterment Levy (Notification)

Regulations 1967 (No. 309) are indicated in Part III thereof.

For the purposes of assessing levy in respect of a Case B disposition, the amount of the consideration is to be taken to be the aggregate of the capital values at the relevant date of the right to receive the rent premium or other consideration, and also of other matters required to be taken into account as elaborated in paragraphs 1 to 3 of the Sixth Schedule to the Land Commission Act 1967, as reduced by the capital value of the payments due from the grantor to his superior landlord.

In this connection it is provided (paragraph 5) that the capital value of a right to receive a rent or other periodical payment is to be calculated by reference to the price which that right might reasonably be or have been expected to fetch on a sale in the open market at the time by reference to which the value falls to be calculated.

It may be thought that the reasoning becomes somewhat artificial in the face of the rule (paragraph 9) which requires the assumption of a tenant who from the grantor's point of view is in every way perfect. Having established the amount of the levy chargeable (if any) in relation to the various elements of the transaction, the proportion applicable to the grant of the premium is ascertained by comparison of the capital values concerned.

The next step is to note the number of complete periods of twelve months in the duration of the lease. Subtracting one and dividing the result by fifty (the fraction resulting from a twenty-one year lease being two-fifths and, from a two-year tenancy, one-fiftieth), the proportion thus ascertained is applied to the premium net of betterment levy to determine the non-chargeable element, the converse proportion being the amount chargeable. The latter amount is dealt with under Case VIII by treating it as rent to which the landlord becomes entitled when the lease is granted.

The second class (section 22 (2), Finance Act 1963) is that where the terms subject to which a lease is granted impose on the tenant an obligation to carry out any work on the premises. The 'enhancement' premium deemed to arise therefrom is measured as being equal to the amount by which the value of the landlord's estate or interest, immediately after the commencement of the lease, exceeds what its then value would have been if the above-mentioned terms did not impose that obligation. It is important to observe that no liability arises in so far as the obligation requires the carrying out of work for which payment would be deductible in computing the landlord's Case VIII rent position if the outlay had been his obligation and not that of the tenant. A deduction for betterment levy is made on the same lines as for class 221 above.

In this connection one may note that the final and conclusive character of a notice of assessment resulting in an operative assessment of betterment levy is subject to any adjustment under sections 54, 55 and other provisions of the Land Commission Act 1967.

Responsibility for payment of the levy rests with the grantor, defined (section 29 (5) (c)) as the person in whom, immediately before the disposition is made, the relevant interest is vested. However, where part of the consideration for a disposition is payable to a person other than the grantor, the levy is to be apportioned as may be appropriate in the circumstances. Such an apportionment is also enjoined where levy is chargeable in respect of land part only of which is the relevant land for the purposes of the charge to tax under Case VIII or Case VI of Schedule D.

The Lands Tribunal is the forum for any question arising in any appeal against an assessment to tax as to the application of the provisions of paragraph 1 of Schedule 15 of the Finance Act 1967, concerning the interaction of betterment levy with Case VIII (or VI). In Scotland references continue to be made to the Tribunal's predecessor under Part I of the Finance (1909–10) Act 1910, as to which see the further particulars in Dymond's Death Duties (fourteenth edition, page 772). In this connection the Land Commission are required to let the Inspector and the Tribunal have such information as they may need.

Commutation premium: section 22 (3)

Next to be considered is what may be termed the 'commutation' premium (class 223), being the amount of a sum payable, under the terms subject to which a lease is granted, by the tenant in lieu of the whole or any part of the rent for any period or as consideration for the surrender of the lease. In this context the duration of the lease is to be taken as not including any period other than that in relation to which the sum is payable. The incidence of the charge is fixed by reference to the date when the sum in question becomes payable by the tenant.

The three foregoing classes of premium (221, 222, 223) escape the tax net if the lease in question was granted before April oth, 1963, or in pursuance of a contract entered into before April 4th, 1963. This exemption does not apply to class 224 next mentioned.

Variation or waiver payments: section 22 (4)

Section 22 (4) of the Finance Act 1963 concerns sums payable by a tenant, etherwise than by way of rent, as consideration for the variation or waiver of any of the terms of the lease, although if the variation or waiver was made in pursuance of a contract entered into before April 4th, 1963, there is no liability.

The amount of betterment levy deductible in the computation under this class (224) is the principal amount of the levy under Case E or Case F charged in respect of the disposition for which that sum is consideration. If this is part only of the consideration brought into account in assessing the levy in respect of the disposition than a proportionate reduction is appropriate as discussed in relation to class 221, the amount of the consideration so brought into account being subject to such adjustments as may be appropriate where the levy is under Case F.

Except in relation to class 222 noted above ('enhancement') it could happen that the amount is due to a person other than the landlord. If so, an equivalent charge is to be imposed on that person under Case VI of Schedule D, although no loss claim under section 346 of the Income Tax Act 1952 or section 60 of the Finance Act 1965 is tolerated. Such a charge under class 224 (variation or waiver) is only competent if the third party stands in relation to the landlord in the position of 'kin' (to coin a phrase in this context).

Connected persons

In relation to an individual, 'kin' includes lineal descendant, brother, sister, and ancestor. Husband or wife are equated with their spouse, the landlord being also identified 100 per cent with any person with whom he is in partnership. This latter rule may, however, be excluded in relation to acquisitions or disposals of partnership assets pursuant to bona fide commercial arrangements. In this connection the dicta of the Court of Appeal in Heastie v. Veitch © Co which concerned rent paid by a firm of accountants to one of the partners throw a useful light on bona fide relationships between landlord and connected tenant.

Should any of the individuals mentioned above be a settlor, the trustees of that settlement are also 'kin'. Companies are brought into family relationship with the 'kin' if connected (in the sense of section 411 (4) of the Income Tax Act 1952) with the settlement just mentioned or with a member of the kinship.

Any two or more persons acting together to secure or exercise control of a company are to be treated in relation to that company as connected with one another and with any person acting on the directions of any of them to secure or exercise control of the company and, subject to these remarks, a company is connected with another person if that person has control of it, either alone or together with persons connected with him.

Company to company connection occurs if the same person has control of both, or a person has control of one and persons connected with him (or he and his 'kin') have control of the other company. A more complex situation is that where a group of two or more persons has control of each company and the groups either consist of the same persons or could be so regarded by treating (in one or more cases) a member of either group as replaced by a person with whom he is connected.

Sale and reconveyance: section 24

The next class of events ('241') to be considered is that where the terms subject to which an estate or interest in land is sold provide that it may be required to be (or shall be) reconveyed at a future date to the vendor or his 'kin'. The measure of the charge, which is imposed under Case VI of Schedule D, is the amount by which the price at which the estate or interest is sold exceeds the price at which it is to be reconveyed, if within two years. If, however, the earliest date at which, in accordance with the terms of the contract, the estate or interest would fall to be reconveyed is a date two or more years after the sale, then the amount of the excess is reduced as for a class 221 premium by reference to the interval between sale and that date.

If the price on reconveyance varies with the date, then initially the dice are loaded against the vendor through the making of the assumption that it is the lowest possible under the terms of the sale, thus generating the highest possible excess. When the reconveyance ultimately takes place the vendor may seek an adjustment in his favour as if that date were substituted, although there is a six-year time limit from the reconveyance within which the claim must be made.

Where the terms of the sale provide for the grant of a lease directly or indirectly out of the estate or interest to the vendor or his 'kin', no problem arises if the lease is granted and begins to run within one month after the sale. In other circumstances the subsequent grant of the lease is treated as if it were a reconveyance at a price comprising the amount of the premium (if any) for the lease together with the value at the date of the sale of the right to receive a reconveyance of the reversion immediately after the lease begins to run.

Notional premium on assignment: section 23

There is a 'delayed action' sub-class of 221 which comes into being where the terms subject to which a short lease was granted are such that the grantor, having regard to values prevailing at the time when it was granted and on the assumption that the negotiations were at arm's length, could have required the payment of an additional sum ('the amount foregone') by way of premium for the grant of the lease.

The latent charge ('231') materializes on the assignment of the lease for a consideration exceeding the premium (if any) for which it was granted or, where the lease has been assigned previously, exceeding the consideration for which it was last assigned. That excess is to be chargeable (section 23 (1), Finance Act 1963) up to the limit of the amount foregone as reduced by any such excess arising on a previous assignment of the lease.

The mode of charge involves treating the assignor as being in receipt of a class 221 premium except that it is chargeable under Case VI of Schedule D. Whether or not a liability is apprehended it is possible to obtain confirmation of the position on submission to the inspector by the grantor or assignor, or any assignee, of a statement of the amount of the liability or its absence. The inspector is required to certify the accuracy of the statement if he is satisfied with it.

Financial Planning with a Corporate Financial Model

IV—Appraisal of a Strategic Opportunity

by A. S. JACKSON, F.C.A., A.A.C.C.A., G. G. STEPHENSON, M.Sc., and E. C. TOWNSEND, B.A.(Econ.), Ph.D.

TO conclude this series of four articles it is now proposed to examine in detail the corporate implications of a possible strategic situation. The National Economic Development Council booklet *Investment Appraisal*¹ will be used as a case study.

The booklet emphasizes the economic truths that investment is one of the main sources of economic growth and that improved methods of investment appraisal will facilitate economic growth. More particularly, the booklet relates the return required by equity shareholders to the return that is required from investments. This is assumed to be 7 per cent for both cases.

Let it be assumed that a company comprises a number of investments which have a behaviour pattern identical to that shown in Investment Appraisal. In order to simulate the company's finances, the National Economic Development Council data can be used together with certain other assumptions, as follows:

1. Investment profitability

This is 7 per cent D.C.F. (after tax and investment grants) resulting from a descending earnings profile; this is in uncorrected money terms.

2. Future growth

The model must determine the rate of growth that is compatible with shareholders' interests. All growth will attract the profitability mentioned above.

3. Investment characteristics

- (a) An investment takes one year to design, erect and test.
- (b) The capital money is spent during that year.
- (c) The investments have fifteen-year lives.
- (d) Depreciation policy is assumed to be straightline over fifteen years.
- (e) There is no working capital.

4. Level of gearing

Initially it will be assumed that the company is wholly equity-financed.

5. Dividend policy

The assumed policy is for the company to maintain a 1.5 dividend cover.

6. Use of surplus cash resources

If cash is available it is to be invested at 6 per cent per annum.

7. Taxation and investment grants

- (a) Corporation tax rate of 40 per cent.
- (b) Annual allowance rate of 20 per cent.
- (c) Investment grants receivable at a rate of 20 per cent.

8. New capital

Assumed that the new capital may be raised every three years if necessary. Again the planning period will be ten years.

Corporate implications of N.E.D.C. example

By feeding the assumptions described above into a corporate financial model, a series of results were obtained which are shown in Table III below. The table shows the discounted yield obtained by a shareholder on his investment, net of all taxes and in money terms by buying shares in the company and holding them for ten years. Personal income tax has been charged at $8s \ 3d$ in the £ and capital gains tax at half that rate.

TABLE III

Growth rate per cent	0	4	8	12
S.R. per cent	3.6	3.9	4.1	4.3

¹ Investment Appraisal (National Economic Development Council); 2nd edition. H.M.S.O.

Two points may be noted from Table III:

- (1) Shareholders' return continues to rise in response to increasing company growth. (Growth in excess of 12 per cent per annum is assumed to be exceptional.)
- (2) For any rate of company growth up to and including 12 per cent, the S.R. is well below the 9 per cent in money terms which shareholders will require. (See earlier reference to Merrett and Sykes.)

The conclusion is that investment by companies in capital projects showing a discounted cash flow return of 7 per cent after tax will not provide shareholders with an acceptable return no matter what growth rate the company is able to achieve.

This is not unexpected. Since both dividends and capital gains are subject to taxation which falls as a liability on the shareholder, the return net of corporation tax only will tend to exceed the return to be given to shareholders, which is calculated net of corporation tax, income tax and capital gains tax.

In practice, companies are able to obtain the benefits of 'gearing' for their shareholders by financing part of their investment from fixed interest sources. To examine this, the assumption of 100 per cent equity financing will be relaxed to allow the company to raise debt capital. The model is run again, allowing the company to raise 15 per cent and then 30 per cent of its funds from fixed interest sources. The results are shown in Table IV.

TABLE IV

Introducing Gearing

Growth rate per cent	0	4	8	12
S.R. with 15 per cent gearing	3·7	4·0	4·3	4·5
S.R. with 30 per cent gearing	3·8	4·1	4·5	4·8

Examination of Table IV shows that while the introduction of debt financing into the company does have an effect upon the shareholders' return, it is by no means sufficient to make the return acceptable.

The next question is whether the results obtained are affected by the rule that the dividend cover shall be held at 1.5. Further runs were made to test the dividend rule and the results are shown in Table V below. Dividend covers of 1.0 and 2.0 were coupled with a zero gearing and a 30 per cent gearing.

TABLE V

Varying the Dividend Policy

Growth rate per cent	0	4	8	12
Dividend cover of 1-0 S.R. with zero gearing S.R. with 30 per cent gearing	3·3 3·5	3·5 3·7	3·6 3·9	3·8 4·1
Dividend cover of 2·0 S.R. with zero gearing S.R. with 30 per cent gearing .	3·8 3·9	4·1 4·3	4·4 4·7	4·6 5·1

Even with the most favourable assumptions about company dividend policy, growth and utilization of debt finance, a company which invested in capital projects exhibiting the features of the example proposed by the N.E.D.C., could not provide its shareholders with a return which exceeded about 5 per cent in money terms (or in real terms 3 per cent per annum).

An alternative interpretation of the facts is that the contribution to the continuing interests of a company's shareholders, which will be provided by investment in a capital project promising – and in the event achieving – the stated cash flow, will not be acceptable by current standards.

It follows that the level of project profitability, measured by the D.C.F. return after tax and investment incentives, which companies should regard as acceptable, must be considerably higher than 7 per cent. Before attempting to suggest how much higher, we must consider the possibility that the corporate impact of an investment project cannot be represented purely by its D.C.F. return. It would seem probable that the shape of an earnings profile becomes important for growing companies. Capital projects may offer a D.C.F. return of 7 per cent from a wide variety of earnings profiles. Table VI shows two such profiles.

Case A is the profile used in Investment Appraisal where the greater part of the cash flow is arising in the early years of productive life. Case B has a reverse profile where the greater part of the cash flow is arising in later life. These two extreme cases will be compared.

If the computer model is run again, replacing the cash flow structure chosen by the N.E.D.C. (Case A)

The program has been allowed to raise fixed interest finance up to a gearing maximum of 15 per cent, and includes a dividend cover of 1.5. The results for Case A are repeated from Table IV and are shown here for ease of comparison.

Table VII shows the returns provided for share-holders from investment by a company n capital projects exhibiting the characteristics of Case A and Case B respectively. Two very important conclusions arise from these results.

First, it is clearly incorrect to attempt to relate the discounted cash flow return earned by a company's capital projects to the return provided for shareholders, without taking into account the rate of capital formation being undertaken by the company concerned.

The second conclusion is disturbing. The impact of the company's rate of growth upon the shareholders' return depends upon the nature of the capital projects in which the company is investing. In the extreme cases described in Table VII, and limiting the analysis to practical growth rates, it is seen that if projects exhibit the characteristics of Case A, the shareholders' return will rise as the growth rate increases. Conversely, if a company is investing in projects whose cash flows are similar to those in Case B, then the shareholders' return will fall in response to increases in the growth rate.

What is an acceptable rate of return on investment?

Any attempt to answer the question 'What is an acceptable rate of return on capital projects?' will carry the authors on to dangerous ground. Nevertheless, this is the question which industry has to answer. Whilst having reservations about the desirability of proffering a general answer suitable for all situations, we feel that some useful indications can be given.

The results obtained from the above analysis indicate that if a company is to ensure that its shareholders obtain a discounted return of 9 per cent per annum in money terms, it may be necessary in some circumstances for the company's capital projects to both promise and achieve a return (after corporation tax and investment incentives) as high as 15 per cent.

projects with an earnings profile similar to that of Case A above, but with increased discounted cash flow rates of return.

Three alternative strategies are examined. In the first, a company wholly financed by equity invests in projects with a 15.5 per cent discounted cash flow. In the second, projects with a 14 per cent discounted cash flow are financed with a 15 per cent level of gearing. In the third, projects with a 12 per cent discounted cash flow are coupled with a 30 per cent level of gearing.

TABLE VIII

Twelve Alternative Investment/Financing Strategies

(Dividend cover set at 1.5 in each case)

Growth rate per cent	0	4	8	12
Case 1 D.C.F. 15-5 per cent and zero gearing S.R	8.2	8.7	9-3	9-8

The limited number of alternatives included in Table VIII shows clearly that discounted cash flow alone cannot be used to appraise acceptable investments.

If a company cannot or will not raise debt finance, then it might achieve success by maintaining a growth rate of 6 per cent (by interpolation) whilst investing in projects whose average return was 15.5 per cent.

Conversely, the ability to 'gear up' the company to 15 per cent would allow shareholder satisfaction to be achieved with 5 per cent growth and 14 per cent project profitability.

Yet again, a company might be deemed successful if it were able to maintain growth at 9 per cent or more, whilst achieving average project returns of 12 per cent coupled with 30 per cent gearing.

Conclusions

- r. The definition of 'an acceptable rate of return' on capital investment projects presents a number of problems not envisaged by the N.E.D.C. publication Investment Appraisal.
- 2. The appropriate shareholders' requirement is not the 7 per cent figure quoted by N.E.D.C., but 9 per cent (money terms, net of all taxes).
- 3. Since the 9 per cent return is net of income and capital gains taxes, it will generally be necessary for companies to earn a return in excess of 9 per cent on its capital investment in order to satisfy shareholders' requirements.

- 4. The extent to which conclusion (3) operates will depend on the degree to which companies are able to employ debt capital. The effect of gearing is to magnify project profitability for the benefit of shareholders.
- 5. The relationship between the shareholders' required return and the minimum acceptable return on capital projects (the 'cost of capital') further depends on the company's rate of growth and its dividend policy.
- 6. Under growth conditions, the relationship between the shareholders' return and the cost of capital is highly sensitive to the profile of income earned by individual capital projects and to the lives assumed for the plants.
- 7. With varying situations of finance, growth and project structure, a return to shareholders of 9 per cent net of all taxes and in money terms could mean that projects should achieve a discounted cash flow rate of return of between 9 per cent and 15 per cent.

New Financial Research Institute

A NEW financial research institute at McGill University to provide the initial ten supporting companies with financial information on 2,400 Canadian and U.S. companies is referred to in The Canadian Chartered Accountant for January. It will use two giant I.B.M. computers to create a data bank of magnetic tapes which will supply general economic data as well as company information. The system is called the largest of its kind in the world. A staff of technicians will operate the computers and put their output in readable form for the ten companies. The non-profit institution will also train business and financial executives and do economic trend studies.

Dr Donald E. Armstrong, of McGill's Graduate School of Business, is quoted as saying that the institute will provide economies of scale which will enable it to do the kind of analysis that is undertaken only by the largest U.S. corporations. Later the supporting firms will have tele-type hook-ups for automatic information from the institute.

A Profession not only of Auditors

N a letter to the same journal, Dr Howard I. Ross, c.A., a Past President of the Canadian Institute and Chancellor of McGill University, suggests that, in training students, it should be recognized that the profession has long ago moved from being devoted to auditing to being a profession which provides several services of which auditing is one.

At present a registered student is, at least tacitly, supposed to spend his time auditing until he completes his service. Dr Ross would have the rules altered, or clarified, to permit the period of qualification to be spent in tax or management consulting work. Later, similar recognition might be given to bankruptcy work. In the final examinations he would have a clear distinction made between accounting, the disclosure and communication of financial information, and auditing, which verifies such information. Then every student would write the accounting papers and also papers in either auditing, consulting or taxation. Otherwise, Dr Ross sees the profession competing with management consultants, to the great disservice of accountants themselves, their clients and the public at large.

SOUTH AFRICA

Statement on Accountants' Duties regarding Unlawful Acts of Clients

RECENTLY, the National Council of Chartered Accountants (S.A.) issued another general statement on auditing practice as an addition to the growing members' handbook that was instituted two or three years ago.

The new statement has a very lengthy title and deals with the duties of members in respect of unlawful acts or defaults of clients. It has been issued for the guidance particularly of the practising member who may find himself, on occasion, in the circumstance where he knows that a client may have been guilty of some unlawful act or default and he, the auditor, is not quite certain of his position or the best procedure to adopt. Portions of the statement have been based on the similar statement issued by the English Institute some years ago but, because of differences in the laws of the two countries, the South African version varies greatly in several important aspects from its English counterpart.

After setting out the general legal considerations affecting the auditor who becomes aware, in the course of his professional duties, of the commission of a crime, the statement proceeds to discuss matters such as frauds and negligence under the Income Tax Act; special points in connection with companies under the Companies Act; the treatment of 'material irregularities' under the Public Accountants' and Auditors' Act; special points in connection with one-man businesses and partnerships and various other matters of minor import.

It is interesting to note that, in the section devoted to discussion of material irregularities, the English and the Afrikaans versions of the statement do not coincide exactly in meaning in one particular paragraph, as is normally the fashion when documents are published simultaneously in both official languages. In the English version of paragraph 39, the precise meaning of 'material' and 'irregularity' is analysed and discussed whereas, in the Afrikaans version, the discussion is directed to the precise meaning and import of the words 'wesenlike' and 'onreelmatigheid' which are the Afrikaans words equivalent to 'material' and 'irregularity' as used in the Public Accountants' and Auditors' Act.

It is remarkable to observe, too, the extent to which the Public Accountants' and Auditors' Act has an impact and a bearing on the work and considerations of the practising accountant in South Africa, as is evidenced by the many references to some section or another of that Act which one finds in this latest statement.

Undoubtedly, this statement will have great value as a reliable source of reference for almost every practising accountant in South Africa.

UNITED STATES

Line of Business Disclosure

R ANDREW BARR, C.P.A., Chief Accountant of the Securities and Exchange Commission, writing in Management Accounting for December, states that the rapid growth of the merger movement in recent years, especially the trend to diversified acquisitions, has focused attention on the need for more detailed reporting on the operations of diversified companies. He says that up to now professional literature has been concerned primarily with internal management needs. However, he notes a considerable increase in writings on the needs of investors and refers to a survey being conducted under the sponsorship of the Financial Executives Institute and a study by the National Association of Accountants which should be most helpful.

Mr Barr believes most, if not all, the fears as to additional disclosures will prove unfounded, and says that the extent to which management is providing details of diversified activities on a voluntary basis is most encouraging. Not only do the 1966 reports give greater details of sales and revenues, but some have provided varying degrees of breakdowns of profits for their diverse operations.

Treasury Opposition to Tax Allocation

THE U.S. Treasury Department's opposition to spreading the effect of the investment credit over the useful life of the related asset, as recommended by an Opinion of the Accounting Principles Board, is referred to in The Journal of Accountancy for December.

In a letter to the Administrative Director, the Treasury Department contends that, while the statutory rate of corporate income tax is 48 per cent, the effective rate for American business as a whole is considerably less, so that the recommended accounting is seen as substantially overstating, in the aggregate, the tax liability of American business and presenting an inaccurate picture of the tax system. The opposition is to tax deferred in general, for it is argued that a substantially identical result could have been achieved by a reduction in tax rates, which accounting treatment would have recognized immediately.

The original proposal was for the investment credit to be allowed only on the excess of current investment over current depreciation, which would have made it difficult to say that the credit was associated with any particular asset, but rather that it was a selective tax reduction for those companies engaged in modernization or expansion. The stimulative effects of the reduction should not be obscured.

In conclusion, the Treasury Department said it had many times indicated its wish to look to the accounting profession for leadership in the computation of income for tax purposes, for these problems were essentially and historically accountants' problems. Where tax law differed there should be a compelling non-accounting reason.

The Journal comments that, before the letter was received, several hundred letters on the Opinion had been received by the Board, a heavy majority being opposed to all or part of it. It is also reported that Messrs Ernst and Ernst have joined Messrs Price, Waterhouse & Co in public opposition to the Opinion. In a letter to its clients also distributed to the Press, the firm stated that 80 per cent or more of United States corporations account for income tax by the flow-through method, without deferral, thus demonstrating general acceptance.

Institute Recommendation on 'Accounting Treatment of Major Changes in the Sterling Parity of Overseas Currencies'

The Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales has made the following recommendation for the guidance of members called on to advise or decide on suitable accounting treatments where the financial accounts of United Kingdom trading companies are affected by major changes in the value of overseas currencies expressed in terms of sterling.

The recommendation deals with general principles and does not attempt to study in detail the great variety of individual problems which may be encountered in practice; each case must be examined in the light of its special circumstances to determine how the effect of a change in sterling parities should best be dealt with so as to present a fair view.

'Sterling' is used throughout to mean United Kingdom money. Other moneys are referred to as 'overseas currencies' or 'currency', notwithstanding that they may be legal currency of a part of the sterling area (the 'Scheduled Territories').

(The recommendation is reproduced as part of the proceedings of the Council reported elsewhere in this issue.)

Normal exchange fluctuations distinguished from major changes in currency parities

OR United Kingdom companies engaged in substantial overseas trade, or owning substantial overseas trading branches or subsidiaries, the normal fluctuations of exchange rates, whether the rates are pegged or floating, may give rise to differences on exchange whenever one currency has to be converted for accounting purposes into another. Such gains and losses on exchange are a normal feature of overseas operations and do not in themselves usually present any special problems. In general, where there has been no substantial shift in parities, exchange differences on direct trading with foreign customers or suppliers are dealt with in the profit and loss account in arriving at the profit or loss for the period. Where the accounts of overseas branches or subsidiaries have to be converted into sterling for inclusion in the parent's or group accounts the normal accounting conventions for conversion are straightforward and are used consistently from year to year. (The appendix to this recommendation contains a note on the conversion conventions usually adopted.)

2. Where, however, exchange rates are subjected to a sudden significant and evidently permanent adjustment outside the run of normal exchange fluctuations, such as happened when, on November 18th, 1967, sterling was devalued in terms of the United States dollar from $2.80 to $2.40, United Kingdom companies may encounter special accounting problems. In these circumstances exceptional exchange gains or losses attributable to the abnormal change in parities may arise as regards both direct trading transactions and the accounts of overseas branches and subsidiaries. It then becomes necessary to determine the amount of exceptional loss or gain involved, and how it should be dealt with in the accounts.

- 3. In broad theory, the loss or gain attributable to a change in parities could be most directly arrived at by converting overseas assets and liabilities at the date the rate changes into sterling first at the old rate and then at the new: the difference between the sterling equivalents, after taking account of any forward transaction in overseas currencies, including any forward purchases and sales of goods, is the exceptional gain or loss attributable to the shift in parities. In the case of overseas branches and subsidiaries (as described in paragraphs 14 and 15 below) the exceptional gain or loss is in practice generally computed by means of adjustments applied to their assets less liabilities at the balance sheet date. The gain or loss so computed, if material, should be segregated from 'normal' exchange gains or losses (which, as noted are generally dealt with in the profit and loss account in arriving at the profit or loss for the period); and separately disclosed either (a) as an exceptional item entering into the computation of the profit or loss for the period; or (b) as an exceptional item shown separately after 'profit after taxation'. When the latter treatment is adopted account has to be taken of any consequential effect on the tax charge and disclosure made of such adjustments as are necessary. Where a company or group has extensive interests overseas and fluctuations in sterling equivalents of overseas assets and liabilities are a recurrent feature, the treatment in (a) above may be preferable unless the amount involved is exceptionally large; in other instances the treatment in (b) may be more appropriate. An alternative to the treatment in (b) is for the exceptional gain or loss (so far as it may be regarded as being of other than a revenue nature - for instance, as arising on the re-statement of currency fixed assets at the new rates) to be dealt with by a direct transfer to or from reserve, if this would facilitate the presentation of a true and fair view. (For recommendations as to the treatment of exceptional items in accounts see Members' Handbook N18: 'Presentation of balance sheet and profit and loss account', paragraphs 43 to 45, and 11 and 12.)
- 4. The identification and treatment of exceptional gains and losses attributable to major changes in exchange parities are dealt with below in two parts; first, in the context of overseas transactions of United Kingdom companies not involving overseas branches or subsidiaries and second in the context of the conversion into sterling of the accounts of overseas branches and subsidiaries.

From Shield Factors' Files

that was starving for

"What's int' mail this morning, lad?"
Young Alan Dewsbury sighed as his father came into their office. "Orders, cheques . . . but not a single useful reply to our 'want-ad'" he said, dispiritedly.

"Nowt? H'm." Old Tom Dewsbury looked glum. Week after week they advertised... put feelers out... passed the word around... without getting the people they wanted. It was downright annoying. In his young days....

The truth was that Dewsbury Engineering Ltd., whose work was highly specialised, had a freehold factory in a small, outlying area some way from a bustling, expanding Northern town. They had a first-class name and facilities but their profit percentage on capital was very small and they'd called in consultants who, among other things, had devised a new system of costing, management accounting and production control. The new system entailed additional staff but the increased gross profit would far outweigh the cost. The real snag was that the new staff just couldn't be found. Not by Dewsbury's, anyway.

"The people we want are in good jobs already" said Alan as he drove home with his father that evening. "And they don't fancy being buried alive out here!" He spoke with feeling. He knew.

"Aye", said old Tom. "Happen you're right. But we can't get new system going till we get staff to do it. Best have a word with those consultants. It's their system we're trying to operate, any road."

The consultants couldn't provide the staff but they did solve the problem. They suggested calling in Shield Factors and now Shield have taken over sales accounting, debt collection and credit control and saved them from account rendering (as well as from bad debts). Relieved of these tasks the existing staff can cope quite easily with the additional work the system calls for—work that, because of their experience, they're the best people to do. So, with the new system no longer held up by staff shortage, and with access to additional finance provided by Shield as well, they're expanding. "Aye, we are an' all!" says Tom Dewsbury.

When considering a Merger three heads are better

A good merger should not be a regret-table necessity but a welcome form of progress. For many a small or medium sized company, competing against bigger rivals, profitable rewards can come from merging with another company in the same or a complementary line of business. The advantages—rationalisation of production and distribution, shared research and experience, greater financial strength—can mean all the difference between continued progress on the one hand, stagnation on the other.

Effecting the right merger with the right partner at the right time is a delicate and expert task needing the services of a third party. That is why Industrial Mergers Ltd. has been established.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is a subsidiary of Industrial and Commercial Finance Corporation. With its own special knowledge plus the backing of I.C.F.C., it has unequalled experience in the small and medium sized company sector of British industry and possesses financial resources to provide the funds which are often necessary to realise the full potential of a merger.

Industrial Mergers Ltd. is impartial. Our sole interest is to arrange a merger of genuine benefit to both parties. Negotiations are absolutely confidential.

If you think we can help your clients please write to Mr. E. R. Izod, Manager, Industrial Mergers Ltd., or to the Manager of any ICFC Branch Office throughout the country. If he feels the time is not yet ripe he will tell you so. If he thinks your clients would do better to stay independent, he can help you safeguard their independence.

Overseas transactions of United Kingdom companies not involving branches or subsidiaries

- 5. For companies with overseas assets and liabilities other than those attributable to overseas branches and subsidiaries, a major change in currency parities will give rise to a sterling gain or loss on exchange in respect of those of their overseas assets or liabilities affected at the date currency rates change.
- 6. In these circumstances the general rule is that overseas assets and liabilities, both current and long term, at the date the parities change should be converted into sterling at the new rate of exchange and the resultant exceptional losses or gains on exchange, if material, presented in the accounts so as to show a fair view of the effects of the alteration in exchange parities.
- 7. Exceptional gains or losses on exchange attributable to changes in parities and relating to overseas assets and liabilities of a normal trading nature are normally dealt with in the profit and loss account, and separately disclosed as an exceptional item if material. Due account is taken of any consequential effect on liability to tax.
- 8. There may be exceptions to the general rule to the extent that any part of the gain or loss may properly be taken into account in arriving at the amount at which items to which it relates are to be stated in the balance sheet. For instance, that part of an exceptional loss on exchange attributable to goods unsold on the balance sheet date may be treated as an increment in cost provided net realizable value in sterling is estimated to be in excess of cost so computed; this treatment is preferable if sterling selling prices of the items on hand have been increased to compensate for the change in parities.
- 9. Similarly, exceptional losses or gains attributable to liabilities outstanding at the relevant date for purchases of fixed assets from overseas are normally dealt with by adjustment of the cost in sterling of the relevant asset account.
- in progress on long-term contracts involving overseas customers or suppliers will require review in the light of altered exchange parities so that provision can be made in the normal way for any foreseeable loss arising therefrom.
- 11. Exceptional gains or losses which may be regarded as not of a revenue nature, such as those relating to long-term loans granted or received may be shown in the profit and loss account or dealt with by direct transfer to or from reserve according to which method will better present a true and fair view, as suggested in paragraph 3 above. Where there are both gains and losses of other than a revenue nature, they are set off in the first instance.

United Kingdom companies with overseas branches or subsidiaries

12. The object of converting the accounts of United Kingdom companies' overseas branches or subsidiaries into sterling is to enable them to be incorporated into the home company's or group accounts at a sterling equivalent which fairly expresses their state of affairs and results. Normally the two main methods of converting other currencies for this purpose, as outlined in the Appendix to this Statement, are the 'closing rate' and 'historic rate' methods.

- 13. Where a major revision of exchange parities has taken place during the financial period it is necessary to determine whether the effect on the sterling equivalent of overseas branches' or subsidiaries' accounts gives rise to an exceptional difference on exchange. In theory, as noted above, the gain or loss attributable to a change in parities could be directly arrived at by converting the accounts of overseas branches or subsidiaries at the dates the rates changed into sterling at the old and new rates and measuring the difference.
- 14. In practice the exceptional gain or loss attributable to the change in parities is normally calculated by adjustment of net assets in the opening or closing balance sheets; for instance, by taking net assets at the last accounting date before the change and adjusting them by reference to the profit earned or loss incurred in the period up to the date of change: the difference between the resultant amount converted at the old and new rates of exchange is the exceptional gain or loss. This achieves the same result as converting net assets at the date the rates changed. Since the 'historic rate' method of conversion uses the average rate of exchange for the year to convert profits or losses (before charging depreciation) it automatically takes account of the effect of any change in parities, but the 'closing rate' method does not, and in that case to determine the exceptional difference on exchange it is normally appropriate to apportion profits or losses to the date the parities changed and to convert results up to that date at the old rate and after that date at the closing rate. In making this calculation results should be apportioned as nearly as possible on an actual basis so as to take due account of seasonal or other fluctuations in trade. Turnover should be apportioned and converted in the same way so as not to present a misleading view of trading and results.
- 15. Under the 'closing rate' method assets and liabilities at the balance sheet date are converted at the rate of exchange then ruling, so that the effect on them of any major change of parities is automatically recognized. Under the 'historic rate' method, however, fixed assets and long-term loans and liabilities are normally stated at their original sterling equivalents. A major change in parities calls in question these amounts. Bearing in mind that proper provision must be made for depreciation of fixed assets and repayment of long-term liabilities it would be unrealistic not to recognize that a change in parities implies an adjustment in the sterling equivalents of fixed assets and longterm loans. In these circumstances it may be desirable either to adjust their sterling amounts by reference to the balance sheet rate of exchange, or to carry out a valuation of fixed assets; if the 'historic rate' method of conversion is to be followed, the latter amounts would continue to be used for future conversion purposes in place of original sterling equivalents. Whichever basis of conversion is used fixed assets appearing 'at cost' in terms of overseas currencies may normally continue to be so described after conversion into sterling, since the position will be made sufficiently clear by disclosure of the basis on which foreign currencies have been converted into sterling as required by paragraph II (a) of the Second Schedule to the Companies Act 1967. In this connection it should also be kept in mind that where the market value of land held as fixed assets is materially different from the book amount at the end of the year, section 16 of the Companies Act 1967 requires the directors to indicate in their report the difference as precisely as is practicable where in their opinion the difference is of such significance that members' attention should be drawn thereto.

Effect of major changes in currency parities after the end of a financial period but before the accounts of that period are completed

16. The general rule set out in Members' Handbook N17 is that post-balance sheet events should not be dealt with in the accounts unless they assist in forming an opinion as to the amount properly attributable, in the conditions existing on the balance sheet date, to any item the amount of which was subject to uncertainty on that date (paragraph 16 (a)). Where rates of exchange have altered after the balance sheet date the alterations would normally be disregarded unless the rates of exchange on the balance sheet date were not realistic and the amounts affected are material, though the implications of a change of parities which is properly excluded from the accounts may nevertheless be of such importance that it may need to be disclosed by the directors through some other medium.

17. Where group accounts are being prepared as at a balance sheet date subsequent to a major currency revaluation, but include the accounts of any overseas subsidiaries made up to a date before revaluation, it is appropriate to apply the post-revaluation exchange rate to such subsidiaries' accounts (for consolidation purposes) having regard to the fact that they are intended to give as fair an estimate as possible of the position at the group balance sheet date.

Recommendations

- 18. (a) An exceptional gain or loss attributable to a major permanent change in currency parities should normally be brought into account in the accounting period in which the change occurs.
 - (b) The exceptional gain or loss attributable to a major change in currency parities is the difference between the sterling equivalents, converted at the old and new rates of exchange, of overseas assets less liabilities at the date on which the rates changed, after taking due account of any relevant forward transactions. Where the 'historic rate' method of conversion is employed it should be considered whether the sterling equivalent of fixed assets should be adjusted to recognize the change in parities. Profits or losses of overseas branches and subsidiaries for the period before the date the rates changed should be converted at the rate of exchange applicable to that period, and profits or losses for the period after the change at the revised rate. Where the 'closing rate' method is employed profits of the period remitted before the rates changed should be converted at the actual sterling amount realized. (See paragraphs 3, 6, 8, 9, 14 and 15 above.)
 - (c) The gain or loss so computed, if material, should be segregated from 'normal' exchange gains or losses and disclosed as an exceptional item. It may be shown separately:

(i) as an item entering into the computation of the profit or loss for the period; or

(ii) below 'profit after taxation'; in this case the effect on the amount shown in respect of tax should be considered, and where appropriate any relevant tax charge or relief should be shown as a separate adjustment;

- (iii) in so far as the loss or gain is regarded as being not of a revenue nature it may be dealt with by direct transfer to or from reserve if this would facilitate the presentation of a true and fair view. (See also Members' Handbook N18, 'Presentation of balance sheet and profit and loss account,' paragraphs 43 to 45, and 11 and 12.)
- (d) To comply with paragraph 11 (9) of Schedule 2 to the Companies Act 1967, the basis on which overseas currencies have been converted into sterling must be disclosed where the amount of assets or liabilities affected is material. The basis on which the results of overseas branches or subsidiaries have been converted into sterling will also need to be disclosed where it is material to the presentation of a true and fair view in the accounts of the home company or the group.
- (e) The effect of any post-balance sheet change in parities should not normally be dealt with in the accounts except to the extent that the accounts of an overseas subsidiary drawn up to a date before the parities changed have to be incorporated in group accounts drawn up to a date after the rates changed.

APPENDIX

Note on the conversion of overseas branch and subsidiary accounts into sterling for the purposes of the financial accounts of United Kingdom companies

- I. The fundamental uncertainties involved in exchange operations make it impossible to lay down hard and fast rules for conversion into sterling of the accounts of overseas branches and subsidiaries, and emphasize the need for each case to be judged on its merits in the light of particular circumstances.
- 2. Where there have not been exceptional changes in exchange parities two main methods are, however, normally accepted for converting overseas branch and subsidiary accounts into sterling for the purposes of the financial accounts of United Kingdom companies. For convenience they are termed here the 'closing rate' (sometimes also called the 'balance sheet rate') and the 'historic rate' methods. Both methods are described in broad outline below though no attempt is made to discuss the variations in detail often found in practice.

Closing rate method

- 3. Under the 'closing rate' method, all items in the overseas branch or subsidiary accounts are converted at the rate ruling on the balance sheet date, subject to special considerations relating to the following items:
- 4. Stocks acquired locally are stated at closing rate, but stocks bought out of sterling funds, or shipped from other foreign branches or subsidiaries in the group are stated at actual sterling cost or sterling equivalent of the currency with which it was purchased, after elimination of profits attributable to transfers within the group. The normal rules for reducing stocks to net realizable value if this is less than cost apply.
- 5. Profit or loss for the year is converted at the closing rate of exchange except for remittances during the year, which are converted at the actual rate.

Historic rate method

6. The historic rate method of converting accounts regards overseas branches or subsidiaries from an accounting point of view as adjuncts of the parent, and their aztivities are measured in terms of sterling, which in normal circumstances is regarded as remaining constant while foreign currencies fluctuate.

- 7. Fixed and other non-current assets are converted into sterling at the rates of exchange ruling when they were acquired or constructed, or at actual sterling cost.
- 8. Depreciation of fixed assets is converted at the rate or rates used when the relevant assets were acquirec.
- 9. Cash, debtors and other current assets (exclucing stocks) are converted at the rate of exchange ruling on -he balance sheet date ('closing rate').
- no. Stocks are converted at the rates ruling at the time when they were acquired or produced, or at actual sterling cost if purchased out of sterling funds. This procedure is consistent with 'historic rate' principles, but in practice, even when the 'historic rate' method is used, it is often found expedient to convert stocks at the closing rate used for other current assets. The normal procedures for determining whether any part of the cost of stock is irrecoverable are applied (see Members' Handbook N22).
 - 11. Current liabilities are converted at the closing rate.
- 12. Long-term liabilities and share capital stated in overseas currency are converted at the rates ruling when they were incurred or issued, or at actual sterling costs.
- 13. Profit and loss account. Depreciation, as noted, is converted at the exchange rates ruling when the relevant fixed assets were acquired. Consequently, depreciation is added back to the profit cr loss for the period under review before conversion into currency. Conversion is then effected at the average rate for the period: a weighted average is applied where profits (or losses) do not accrue evenly throughout the period.

'Closing rate' and 'historic rate' methods compared

14. In normal circumstances both the 'historic rate' and 'closing rate' methods are widely used and equally acceptable in practice. The 'historic rate' method is the more traditional. It measures overseas operations from the standpoint of a stable and unchanging home currency, and was evolved in the context of overseas branches and subsidiaries largely financed and stocked from the United Kingdom. The 'closing rate' method, which has been increasingly adopted in recent years, recognizes overseas branches and subsidiaries as viable units existing apart from their parent, and by no means necessarily relying on their parent for finance or stocks. It expresses overseas operations in current and realistic sterling amounts, and has the practical advantage over the 'historic rate' method of simplicity of operation' The method of conversion to be selected is, however, a matter for judgement in the light of the facts of individual cases. The 'historic rate' method, may, for instance, sometimes be preferred where an overseas currency has a history of instability in relation to sterling and the circumstances are such that it is judged appropriate to continue to state fixed assets on the basis of their original sterling equivalents.

Taxation Cases

In the Court of Session (First Division) November 30th, 1967

Income tax – Investment allowance – Road vehicle – Ford van – Whether suitable for use as private vehicle – Finznce Act 1954, section 16 (3) – Vehicles Excise Act 1962, Schedule 4.

The taxpayer, an electrical engineer, purchased a new and unused Ford 7 cwt van, and licensed it under the Vehicles Excise Act 1962. The van had two seats, one for the driver and a seat beside it, and no side windows. It was not adapted in any way, and it was used solely by the taxpayer for business purposes. The maker's advertisement stated that the vehicle was also ideal for private use.

The taxpayer claimed an investment allowance for the vehicle. The General Commissioners rejected the claim.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) - July 18th, 1967

(Before Mr Justice Pennycuick)

(Before The Master of the Rolls (Lord Denning), Lord Justice DIPLOCK and Lord Justice Edmund Davies)

Surtax – Alleged tax advantage – Counteracting notice – Statutory declaration by taxpayer – Counter-statement by Inland Revenue – Sent to section 28 Tribunal – Whether taxpayer entitled to be heard by tribunal – Whether entitled to see counter-statement – Finance Act 1927, section 31 – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 247, 251 – Finance Act 1960, section 28 – Finance Act 1962, section 25.

In February 1967, the Inland Revenue issued a notification to the taxpayer and his wife, in accordance with section 28 (4) of the Finance Act 1960, that they had reason to believe that section 28, as amended by section 25 of the Finance Act 1962, might apply to each of them in respect of transactions relating to shares in a company. In March 1967, the Inland Revenue received statutory declarations from the taxpayer and his wife, in pursuance of the same subsection, stating the facts and circumstances upon which their opinions that the section did not apply to them were based. The Inland Revenue sent certificates and counterstatements under section 28 (5) to the tribunal constituted under section 28 (7).

In May 1967, the registrar of the tribunal was informed by the taxpayers' solicitors that the taxpayers wished to be represented by counsel when the tribunal was considering whether or not there was a prima facie case for proceeding in the matter; and that the taxpayers should be given copies of the certificates and counter-statements of the Inland Revenue. These requests were refused, and the taxpayers took out an originating summons for a declaration as to how the tribunal should act in this regard.

Held: by Mr Justice Pennycuick: (1) the tribunal was not bound to give the taxpayers an opportunity of dealing with the certificates and counter-statements of the Inland Revenue; (2) nor to address argument to the tribunal; (3) the procedure adopted by the tribunal was not contrary to natural justice.

Held: in the Court of Appeal: the procedure in question was not contrary to natural justice. The other two points were not argued in the Court of Appeal.

C.I.R. v. Land Securities Investment Trust

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division)

(Before Mr Justice Cross)

Limited profits tax – Sales of property – For rent-charges – For limited periods – Deduction of tax – Whether rent-charges dissectible as to capital and income – Whether capital payments – Whether deductible for profits tax – Finance (No. 2) Act 1940, section 14(1) – Income Tax Act 1952, section 177.

The company and a subsidiary purchased a number of freehold and leasehold properties in consideration of rent-charges for ten years. Previously the company and the subsidiary had held long leases of the properties; and as a result of the purchases the companies ceased to pay rents totalling £62,500, and became liable for ten years to pay rent-charges totalling £96,000. The company deducted tax in paying the rent-charges.

It was contended for the Revenue (i) that each rent-charge should be dissected into two portions, the one representing capital and the other income; and that the right to deduct tax was applicable only to the income portions; (ii) that the rent-charges were capital payments and were therefore not deductible in computing the company's profits for profits tax purposes. The Special Commissioners decided that the rent-charges were not dissectible, and were wholly revenue payments.

Held: the rent-charges should be dissected; and that the stated case should be remitted to the Special Commissioners for them to decide how much of each rent-charge was income and therefore deductible for profits tax purposes.

Clixby v. Pountney

(Before Mr Justice Cross)

Income tax – Back duty – Profits understated – Bank interest omitted – Accounts and returns prepared by accountant – Reliance on accountant – Whether wilful default by taxpayer – Income Tax Act 1918, sections 125, 132, 122 – Finance Act 1942, section 33 – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 47 (I), 501.

The profits of the taxpayer's business as a haulage contractor were understated to a substantial extent, and sums of bank interest were not disclosed. He had been in business since 1927, and had signed the returns. He might have read a return at some time, but he had complete faith in his accountant, who had the relevant books, and from whom nothing was suppressed. The undisclosed bank accounts had been opened by the accountant. The accountant died in 1954.

The taxpayer received and read copies of the accounts of his business, but not until after the profits or losses had been agreed. He failed to notice understated debtors, and could not explain an understatement of stock in one year's accounts. The deceased accountant had had sufficient information to enable him to prepare correct returns and accounts.

Additional assessments, under Case I, were made on the taxpayer for 1943–44 to 1948–49 in respect of profits, and under Case III for the same years and also for 1949–50 in respect of bank interest. It was contended on behalf of the Revenue that the taxpayer had himself been guilty of wilful default; and that wilful default had been committed on his behalf by the accountant. It was contended for the taxpayer that the proviso to section 47 (1) applied only if the taxpayer had himself been guilty of fraud or wilful default, or if he had authorized his agent to commit fraud or wilful default or had ratified it. The General Commissioners decided that the taxpayer had not himself committed wilful default; but that the accountant had done so on his behalf. Accordingly they confirmed all the assessments.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

(Before Mr Justice Cross)

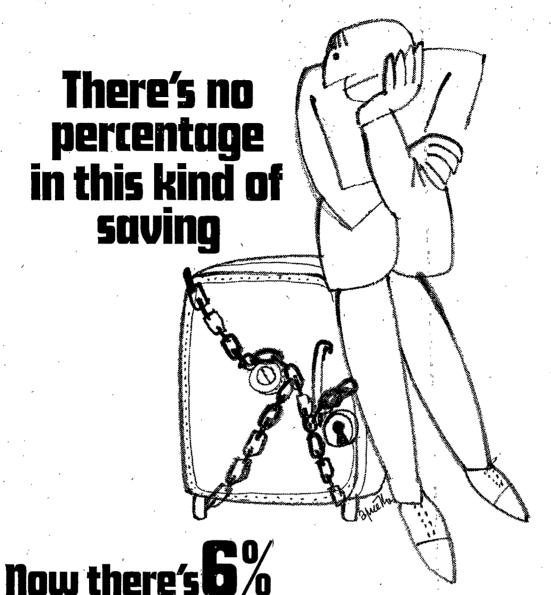

Income tax — Double taxation — Dividend — Credit against U.K. tax — United States — Canada — Depreciation allowances — For tax on reducing-balance basis — For accounts on straight-line basis — Relevant profits — Whether assessable profits or profits in accounts — Income Tax Act 1952, section 347, Schedule 16, paragraph 9.

The appellant company, resident in the United Kingdom, had a subsidiary resident in Canada, and the subsidiary (Bowater North America) held the equity shares in all the Bowater subsidiaries in the United States and Canada. The income of Bowater North America was mainly in the form of dividends from its subsidiaries, some of which suffer Canadian tax, and others United States tax, on their profits. In its turn Bowater North America paid dividends to the appellant company.

Under double taxation agreements the appellant company was entitled to credit, against United Kingdom tax, in respect of the United States and Canadian taxes paid on the profits of the subsidiaries in North America. By paragraph 9 of Schedule 16 to the Income Tax Act 1952, these taxes to be taken into account in computing this credit were the taxes borne on 'the relevant profits' of the company concerned.

In computing their profits liable to Canadian or United States taxes there were deducted the depreciation allowances made to the respective subsidiaries under the relevant tax legislation. These allowances differed from the provisions made by the subsidiaries for depreciation in their accounts. In the case of one of the subsidiaries some of its fixed assets were depreciated for accounts purposes on a straight-line basis, and the subsidiary was therefore entitled to tax depreciation on the same basis at twice the rate used in its accounts. As a result the profits of the subsidiary assessable to United States tax in the relevant years were much lower than the profit shown in its accounts. The subsidiary could not have used the same rate of depreciation in its accounts without showing substantial losses which would not have been commercially true. In the case of the Canadian subsidiaries the difference between depreciation for accounts purposes and for tax was due to computing the former on the straight-line basis and the latter on the reducing balance basis.

It was contended for the appellant company that 'relevant profits' in paragraph 9 aforesaid means profits as computed for the purposes of foreign taxes; alternatively, that dividends paid by Bowater North America should be deemed to be paid out of taxed profits and not rateably out of taxed and untaxed profits. For the Revenue it was contended that the phrase meant the gross divisible profits, i.e. those shown in the accounts after deducting depreciation proper to be made. It was agreed that it was necessary to construct a fraction, and to apply it to the foreign tax paid, and that the numerator of the fraction was the dividend in question. It was also agreed that the denominator was 'the relevant profits', as reduced by the foreign tax, and the dispute was as the calculation of those profits. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) December 21st, 1967

(Before Mr Justice Cross)

Surtax – Investment income – Counteracting tax advantage – Reduction of capacity of business – Surplus money capitalized – Issue of bonus shares – Reduction of capital – Money returned to shareholders – Whether a return of issue payments – Whether tax advantage a main object – Married woman not separately assessed – Whether tax advantage possible – Finance Act 1960, sections 28, 43 (4) (g).

The taxpayer and his wife held shares in a company owning five cotton mills, which needed to be modernized. In 1954 one mill was sold, and in 1959 two other mills were disposed of. One of the remaining mills was re-equipped and the other retained in operation because it had some useful years of life left. The company received £112,976 in compensation under the Cotton Industry Act 1959, in respect of the mills disposed of, and it became liable to levies which came to £58,986. Some of the stockholders wished to put the company into liquidation, but it was decided that rationalization was preferable.

On April 2nd, 1960, the company's capital consisted of £284,235 ordinary stock, and there was a capital redemption reserve fund of £60,000. The cash, tax reserve certificates and the investments exceeded the current liabilities, including taxation provision, by £228,696; and the company would receive the compensation, £112,976, against which the levies would be set. The reduction in capacity, together with the increasing use of man-made fibres, which could be ordered monthly resulted in the holding of smaller stocks. It was decided that £284,235 was surplus to requirements, and should go to the shareholders; that this should be done in a reduction of the company's capital; and that for this purpose there should be a capitalization and an issue of bonus shares.

In November 1959, an extraordinary general meeting

resolved (i) that the unissued 10s ordinary shares be subdivided into 5s shares; (ii) that the £60,000 unclassified capital be classified as 240,000 ordinary shares of 5s each; (iii) that £129,490 of the undivided profits, and the £60,000 in the capital redemption reserve fund, be distributed as in the form of 757,960 ordinary shares of 5s each credited as fully paid up; (iv) that these shares be converted into ordinary stock. The authorized capital thus became £473,725 issued ordinary stock, and 181,410 of unissued 5s ordinary shares, £45,352 10s.

In November 1960 an extraordinary general meeting resolved (i) that the capital be reduced from £519,077 10s, divided into £473,725 ordinary stock and 181,410 ordinary shares of 5s each, to £234,842 10s, divided into £189,490 ordinary stock and 181,490 ordinary 5s shares, by returning to the shareholders 12s for every £1 of ordinary stock, and by reducing every £1 of the ordinary shares to 8s; (ii) that the capital should then immediately be increased to its former amount of £519,077 10s by the creation of 1,136,940 new ordinary shares of 5s each. The reduction of capital was confirmed by the Court in the same month, and the amount returned to the stockholders was £284,235.

Prior to the resolution of November 1959, the taxpayer held £24,022 10s stock, and so he had 64,060 shares allotted to him, and these were converted into £16,015 stock, bringing his holding to £40,037 10s stock. On the reduction of capital in November 1960, he received £24,022 10s being 12s for every £1 of stock he held. He was also entitled absolutely to one-ninth of the estate of a relative. In consequence of the reduction of capital the trustees received £29,533 17s 6d.

The taxpayer's wife was at all relevant times living with him, and was not separately assessed to surtax. She held stock in the company, and as a result of the reduction of capital she received £7,500.

Notices under section 28 of the Finance Act 1960 were served on the taxpayer and his wife specifying adjustments as being requisite for counteracting tax advantages. For the Inland Revenue it was contended that the transactions in question were not carried out for bona fide commercial reasons; that the main object or one of the main objects of the transactions was to obtain tax advantages; and that the part of the £284,235, which did not exceed the sum capitalized by the resolution of November 1959, did not represent a return of sums paid on the issue of securities within section 28 (2) (iii) of the Finance Act 1960. It was also contended that Mrs Hague had obtained a tax advantage. For the taxpayers the contrary contentions were advanced. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue; but that Mrs Hague was not in a position to obtain a tax advantage, in that such an advantage accrued to her husband. In the High Court the Revenue did not contest that the transactions had been carried out for bona fide commercial reasons. It was there also contended for the taxpayer that all the sum repaid out of undistributed profits, namely, the £129,490, should be attributed to the pre-existing capital of £284,235. To this the Revenue contended that a proportion of the £284,235 should be attributed to the £129,490, and that the proportion was 129,420 over 284,235.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision as to a tax advantage could not be disturbed; but that the proportion of the £129,490, which should be attributed to distributed profits was 129,490 over 473,725; and that Mrs Hague, although a married woman not separately assessed, was caught by section 28.

General & Engineering Industries

GENERAL & ENGINEERING INDUSTRIES LTD is one of those nebulous company names usually born of industrial regroupings or industrial trials and tribulations. In the present instance both apply, since General & Engineering Industries was once called Arusha Industries and before that Arusha Plantations. Connoisseurs of stockmarket speculation will remember the heady rise in Arusha Industries' shares in the late 1950s, when shares which stood at 1s 1d in 1957 stood as high as 51s 6d in 1959. By 1961 the price was back to 6s.

But that is past history and in its present form General & Engineering is a solid organization and the accounts, from which this week's reprint is taken, are well presented, albeit in 1948 rather than 1967 Companies Act terms. The essential information in this type of industrial holding company is what each subsidiary does and what it supplies to the group in terms of earnings.

This information General & Engineering supplies in good measure. Results of subsidiary companies' (included in the reprint) shows the earnings of each subsidiary, with head office costs and interest charges deducted, to leave group pre-tax profit. The figures go on to show, as will be seen, total sales and profits as a percentage of those sales.

Where the money went

Turnover was down by about 7 per cent on the previous year and pre-tax profits by 18 per cent. But in view of the less buoyant conditions in the engineering industry, the results are considered 'fairly satisfactory', with the profit setback taking place in two subsidiaries whose results, in aggregate, were down by £172,000 – the companies being R. H. Windsor Ltd, makers of industrial machinery, and Hemmings Ltd, steel manufacturers and processors.

Besides the information on subsidiary companies' earnings, 'Allocation of group income' is another useful piece of detail in the General & Engineering report. It is seldom that one finds in a company report an entire reconciliation of income with outgo. 'Cake cutting' was referred to in this column last week, and the 'Allocation of group income', in this particular case, is 'cake cutting' par excellence. It shows that plain figures, clearly presented, can be just as informative, if not more so, than any number of graphs and diagrams.

This feature of the General & Engineering Industries' accounts allows shareholders to see clearly where the year's money went which, as we have already observed, should be one of the first essentials in company reporting.

New addition

Since the end of the financial year the share capital of Barlow & Chidlaw Ltd, of Manchester, makers of medium and large gear-wheels, has been bought at a cost of £745,000 provided by a loan to the company for a period of one year at a fixed interest rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent per annum.

This operation substantially increases the amount of additional finance needed in the near future, particularly since £500,000 of 7 per cent secured loan stock has to be repaid by June 30th next. The Chairman, Mr M. Ellison Rich, says, 'We hope to fund this indebtedness on a long-term basis during the current year and are now giving consideration to this question.'

During the financial year, approval was given to write off against share premium account and general revenue reserves, losses which arose following the closing down of certain subsidiary companies in 1964. Court approval was obtained last July. Accordingly, the item shown in the 1965–66 accounts, 'Amount provided in prior years against investments in non-trading subsidiaries – £1,106,899', has been deleted by writing off £1,081,994 against share premium account and £24,905 against general revenue reserves.

This operation effectively removes from the accounts the remaining evidence of the older, Arusha Industries, days. There can now be complete concentration on the group as presently constituted, and looking at current-year prospects the chairman considers that, with one or two exceptions, subsidiaries can be expected to benefit from devaluation in the second half of the year, provided rises in costs can be contained.

Proxy form

The chairman comments on the operations of all subsidiaries, and details of their location and products are adequately provided and illustrated. Mention may be made of the final page in the report which consists of the proxy form for shareholders' use.

The 'two way' form is printed on one side of a quarto page, which is perforated. When removed from the report, it can be folded and posted (prepaid) to the registrar. This is a considerable improvement on the familiar 'postcard' method where the card stands a very fair chance of being lost.

The form used by General & Engineering Industries is certainly worthy of wider consideration. It is already in use by some companies – Limmer and Trinidad Co Ltd being one which has come to notice. There is even, perhaps, something compulsive about having the form in this tearout, fold-up-and-post pattern. It seems virtually to ask to be 'filled out', as the current idiom has it.

CITY NOTES

STOCK-MARKET conditions have been so overpowered by merger and take-over operations that it is difficult to judge the true tone of the equity sections. Turnover has been heavy and since, on balance, the market has fallen back in index terms it is evident that considerable selling pressure has only been absorbed at the expense of some reduction in prices.

The urge to merge seems almost to have reached panic proportions, with industrial disaster apparently predicted in one instance when merger terms were turned down. To what extent the real position of the equity market is being falsified by the reaction to merger and take-over operations is impossible to say but it would seem reasonable to suggest that a new outcrop of dire Budget warnings would, by now, have seen the market considerably lower than it is but for the supporting influence of 'bids and deals'.

Mistrust of money seems still to be the main spur to equity buying and there is still a substantial amount of doubt as to whether the inevitable compromise between economic necessity and political expediency will bring the Budget that the economy needs.

Equipment Notes and News

Computer Payroll Service

A SUITE of computer payroll programs has been developed by the bureau division of English Electric Computers Ltd. It supplements the company's existing 'Multipay' payroll accounting service.

The programs, in addition to providing basic gross to net pay calculations with individual payslips and cumulative totals, also make available a number of related management information services. Among these is a unit costing facility which informs an employer how many personnel take part in the manufacture of individual products, how long each man works on the product and the amount he is paid. The programs also cater for selective employment tax as well as providing information for year-end tax documents in a form acceptable to the Inland Revenue. Payslips and payrolls are produced so that each employee receives a pay advice slip and wages office staff receive total summaries for each department and group of departments, as well as a grand total at the end of the entire payroll. Further aids available to wages office staff by the service include a departmental analysis of coins and notes required for cashpaid employees and an analysis of National Health Insurance stamps.

Companies making use of the service for the first time provide the bureau division with a list of employees and their personal details required for the payslips and payroll. This data is then transferred to the division's main payroll files and becomes a permanent record. Details of new staff, employees leaving the company or amendments to existing particulars can be inserted with the normal payroll data on any run and the main file is automatically updated.

The service is offered by English Electric's computers in London, Bristol and Kidsgrove. A typical payroll for 1,000 employees costs between £25 and £50 per week, depending on the facilities utilized.

Where to Learn About Computers

As more computers are being installed by national and local government departments, and deliveries to industrial concerns are now becoming commonplace, there are probably still some accountants who feel they would like to know more about computers than they already do.

Apart from the courses organized by the accountancy bodies themselves, there are a number of courses at all levels open to management, and a number of associations are sponsoring courses at technical colleges and elsewhere. Computer suppliers also run appreciation courses for company accountants which are surprisingly unbiased in their general concept – although no doubt they hope that any subsequent decisions will favour their own equipment.

Rolls-Royce are also running courses ranging from fiveday residential to one-day appreciation courses. For further information contact Mr Colin Allan, Computer Education Manager, Rolls-Royce Ltd, P.O. Box 31, Derby.

Courses are also being organized by the U.K. Atomic Energy Authority and details may be obtained from the Secretary, APACE, U.K.A.E.A., Blacknest, Brimpton, near Reading, Berks.

A useful source of information on a wide number of courses is available from the British Computer Society, 23 Dorset Square, London NW1, who publish an annual list of over four hundred courses, price 7s 6d.

Details of the courses run by the computer suppliers are available from the Courses Manager of each company

NCR 500 COMPUTER INSTALLED

The National Discount Company recently installed the first of two NCR 500 computers at its head office in Cornhill, London. To be used initially for the control of investments, money and securities and share registration, the computers will be fed by punched paper tape. Account details will be stored on magnetic strip ledger cards and up-dated both visually and magnetically on Class 33 accounting machines.

The National Discount Company is the second largest discount house in Britain and also the oldest organization of its kind registered under the Joint Stock Companies Act 1856, being registered on September 27th of that year.

Copying from Strip Index Panels

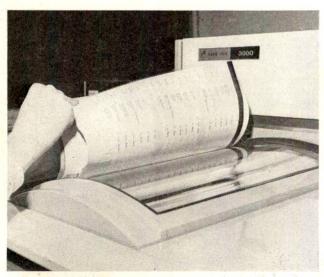

STRIP index panels, which are widely used for lists of customers, spare parts lists, code indexes, staff lists or as updating price lists, have in the past been mounted in rigid metal panels, so making them extremely difficult to copy except perhaps on certain flat-bed copiers.

Now a flexible strip index from Kalamazoo enables them to be copied on almost any desk top copier or machines with a curved platen such as the Rank Xerox 2400 or 3600 copiers.

This system of storing names can be particularly useful for paying salaries by Bank Giro Credit which usually requires three copies of a list showing each employee's bank and code number. Also a separate Giro transfer slip is needed for each individual. Keeping the list on a flexible strip index saves re-typing, as each week the blank list of employees is copied and the amount to be paid is entered on this copy. This becomes the master for copies for the bank.

To produce the Giro slips, a transparent overlay is used with a 'window' through which one employee's details and pay can be viewed, moving down the list of names in turn until copies of all the slips have been made.

These strip panels are supplied with individual card strips ready for typing, writing or printing on addressing machines. They can then be separated and mounted anywhere in the list, or an old one removed in a moment.

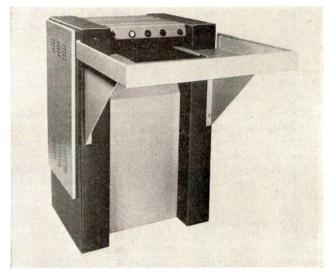

The new flexible Kalamazoo Copy-Strip index panel makes it possible to reproduce direct from strip index.

Panels measure $12\frac{3}{4} \times 7$ ins and can be stored in loose-leaf binders or trays when not in use.

coupons, vouchers, tickets, envelopes, computer print-out or punched cards.

It is strong enough to take complete folders or magazines, even thin metal litho plates or cartons, foam rubber and some plastics.

Power is supplied from a 3.5 h.p. motor to two sets of contra-rotating hardened steel discs which do not need sharpening. Various models can be supplied to provide shreds of $\frac{1}{8}$, $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{3}{8}$ or $\frac{1}{2}$ inch in width and with various output capacities. The basic price is £490.

Business Aids Ltd, 13/15 Wenlock Road, London N1.

Coin-operated Photocopier

A 'SHILLING-IN-SLOT' electrostatic copier has been announced by Smith-Corona Ltd. Designed to provide a rapid, on-the-spot copying service for libraries, schools, colleges and hotels, etc., it can also provide the answer to companies who do not wish to ban their staff from making personal copies (of football pool coupons, etc.?) but who find the cost of convenience copying is surprisingly high. With this machine sited in the recreation room or main hall, the print room or central copying section can then be made 'out of bounds' to staff for personal use.

The Coronastat coin-operated model is based on the larger, wheel-about Model 55 from Smith-Corona, which was demonstrated at the 1966 Business Efficiency Exhibition but only started to make its appearance in offices in Britain earlier this year. It has a speed of eight copies a minute from 3×5 inches to $10 \times 15\frac{1}{2}$ inches in size.

Any colour pen, pencil, ball-point or crayon will reproduce and copies are dry and ready for use on leaving the machine. As no warming-up time is required, the machine can be switched on immediately before use, and switched off again afterwards.

Streamlining Money Transmission Services

THE Committee of London Clearing Bankers are installing an International Computers and Tabulators 1906E computer system for their Inter-Bank Computer Bureau. Costing more than £1 million, the computer will be used to process the interchange of standing orders, direct debits and credit transfers between the eleven clearing banks, the Scottish banks and their customers.

The establishment of the bureau - which will be able to handle 250 million transactions a year - was announced by the clearing banks last April. Its primary function is to accept magnetic tapes, from computer-using customers of the banks, containing information which would otherwise be recorded on paper vouchers.

Each day by 10 a.m. data on up to one million transfers will be delivered to the bureau for processing. The data on seven or nine track industry-compatible magnetic tape or on punched paper tape will be sent by the banks themselves or directly by their customers. The computer system will sort the data and prepare magnetic tapes for posting to customer accounts at the computer centres of the banks. It will also print credit transfers for branches not yet linked to a computer. The operation is due to commence next month, and over the following fifteen months it will be built up to the full configuration.

Correspondence

training (once past the double-entry stage) which only the most Canute-like accountant would dispute. The increasing complexities of public practice on the one hand and industry and commerce on the other, require a commonsense rationalization of training methods, coupled with recognition of the incontrovertible logic of 'horses for courses'.

From Accountant to Executive

SIR, - Publication of the results of the comparative survey of American and British managerial attitudes to the qualifications looked for in potential financial executives in Mr Ian Tricker's article 'From Accountant to Executive' in your issue of February 10th, was both timely and revealing.

For reasons which escape me, attempts to discuss in a rational and dispassionate manner this very important subject of the best training background for the financial executive in industry often seem to generate more heat than light, and it is therefore with some trepication that I venture to comment at a time when the future of the profession is being discussed behind the closed doors of the council chambers in London ECI, WCI and WI.

It is apparent from the analysis of preferred professional and educational backgrounds in the two countries which was given in Table 1 in Mr Tricker's article that American industrialists are very much less hidebound in their outlook than are their counterparts in the United Kingdom. Indeed, the relative lack of interest in the C.P.A. qualification as a training ground for industry might be a cause for astonishment were it not for the knowledge that academic training in business finance in the U.S.A. has for many years enjoyed a mature acceptance and respect that is still largely denied it in this country.

The mental chasm that yawns between the auditor's necessarily historical/legalistic approach and the management accountant's concern with tomorrow's profits (or losses) inevitably dictates a different approach to their basic

Overseas Company Taxation

SIR, – Referring to the table of overseas company tax rates as set out on pages 14–18 of your issue dated January 6th, you may be interested to know that for Nigeria there is a new tax ('super tax') of 10 per cent on profits of companies, other than oil exploration companies, and this tax is additional to company income tax at 40 per cent. The relevant legislation is Super Tax Decree 1967.

Super tax applies to the year of assessment 1967–68 and subsequent years, and the rate of 10 per cent is calculated on the remainder of (1) 'total profits' as computed for income tax purposes, less (2) the 'standard deduction'. The standard deduction is the greater of £5,000 or 15 per cent of the company's paid-up share capital at the beginning of the accounting period which forms the basis of assessment

Yours truly,

Lagos, Nigeria.

Higher Entry Standards

SIR, – I am concerned at the Institute Council's recent declaration of intent proposing that from next year those who have not obtained at least two 'A' levels should be barred from the possibility of becoming chartered accountants. I am all in favour of encouraging a further increase in the proportion of graduate entrants, and indeed of 'A' level entrants also, but I think the proposal would act with undeserved harshness on persons who, though increasingly few in number, could yet make valuable members of the profession.

Basically this is a proposal to bar from articles anyone who leaves school, for whatever reason, before he is eighteen. The proportion of able boys who do so today is not great, but neither is it wholly negligible. The most common cases arise, of course, where parents simply cannot afford to maintain schoolchildren any longer, especially widowed or deserted mothers struggling to bring up two or three children. Such boys can make first-class employees and in some cases are soon seen to merit articles. For example, during my own period of articles in a large firm I must have known more than thirty other articled clerks. Probably the most able of them, now rapidly building up a successful practice, was precisely one whom the Council would now bar.

It is also possible that in the next few years, when comprehensive schooling is being introduced – in some areas abruptly and with inadequate planning – the quality of sixth-form teaching will fall sharply in some schools. Boys at those schools – often in areas where other environmental factors militate against them – may well be penalized quite unjustly.

To put it bluntly a number, small but real, of first-class potential accountants would be kept out of the profession because we are asked to set more value on our image than on reality.

Yours faithfully,

London EC4.

Turnover in Accounts

SIR, - We note that in your issue of February 10th, you publish a reprint of our accounts in the Finance and Commercial section.

In your comments you suggest that the board takes the old-fashioned view of not disclosing turnover. This is far from the case – in an historical brochure on the company, distributed with the accounts, the turnover at the time of issue early in 1967 was quoted and for many years anyone reading our accounts could, if he so wished, calculate our turnover just as you did in your comments.

As an accountant in industry for many years I am unable to comprehend this preoccupation with overall turnover. In my opinion it is, in isolation, a meaningless figure which only becomes informative when, for example, a company has varied activities and quotes turnover in respect of each.

There are occasions when overall turnover can be very misleading. Take two companies of similar size and with the same number of employees. Company 'A' had double the turnover of Company 'B'. One might well surmise that Company 'A' had double the productivity of Company 'B'. The truth of the matter might well be that Company 'B' made its products from scratch and retained control throughout, whilst Company 'A' bought in finished components and assembled them. In these circumstances Company 'A' could well be vulnerable due to reliance on the availability and price of components from outside suppliers, over whom no control could be exercised.

It is for these reasons that, so far, we have not considered overall turnover to be of sufficient importance for inclusion in our accounts which are, I believe you will agree, very informative.

In case any of our shareholders reading your journal are worried that, according to your figures in the Consolidated Balance Sheet, the company extinguished its whole share capital in 1967, I can assure them that this is not the case!

Yours faithfully,

Sheffield.

Corporation Tax Paradox

SIR, - Perhaps another light-hearted jingle may help to relieve the prevailing gloom:

If you're anxious for to pay, in an economic way,
A dividend, so costly and so rare,
Before you make the debit, you must possess a credit
Which is 'franked' they say, before it takes the air.
You must be somewhat rash and invest your surplus cash
In equities and not upon gilt-edged,
And your shareholders will say as they walk their wealthy way
You have given them the 'divies' that you pledged.

Something else that you can do, which will save a pound or two.

Is to change your shares to interest-bearing stock By special resolution and the ultimate solution May give the holders quite a nasty shock. No longer in possession, they ensure by this concession That the business they don't own is doing fine, As the interest then remitted is by the law permitted To be a charge above the C.T. line.

The paradox is plain – to obtain the greatest gain You don't want any equities at all, If this were universal, it would be complete reversal Of the customary view of capital. With no dividends to pay, you could genuinely say That your company's position's getting stronger, You will not need a credit to set against the debit 'Cause there isn't any debit any longer.

Yours faithfully,

O. S. J. D.

Inland Revenue Accounts

SIR, – The complications of the capital gains tax legislation deserve the strictures made in your leading article of February 3rd. But in regard to the present small yield from the tax, two points should be borne in mind.

First, capital gains of most companies are chargeable to corporation tax. Secondly, the yield from capital gains tax should rise steadily, since gains are measured only from April 6th, 1965.

Yours faithfully,

F.C.A.

Report and Accounts

The Council approved the accounts of the P. D. Leake Trust for the year ended October 31st, 1967 for inclusion in the fifteenth Annual Report of the Trust.

Copies of the report and accounts may be obtained free of charge on application to the Secretary of the Institute.

Teaching Fellowships

The Council noted that Mr B. G. Harr-son, F.C.A., Mr R. J. Lister, M.A., A.C.A., and Mr J. Liversidge, F.C.A., had been appointed to P. D. Leake Teaching Fellowships tenable at the University of Aston in Birmingham, the University of Salford and the University of Bradford, respectively.

The purpose of the Fellowships is to enable suitably qualified accountants, preferably with some experience after qual fication and who are interested in teaching as a career, to study for a higher degree.

Six Fellowships have been awarded during the last two years and it is hoped that further appointments will be made in future years.

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at hearings held on January 3rd, 1968

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Nels Royden Johnson, an associate of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of Clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that being a member in practice (a) having written a letter on his professional notepaper to a newspaper which was published in an issue of that paper for October 25th, 1967, he took no steps to ensure that he was not described as a chartered accountant in the publication of the letter (b) in connection therewith he permitted and/or procured a photograph of himself to be published in the said issue, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Nels Royden Johnson, A.C.A., had been proved under both headings and the Committee ordered that Nels Royden Johnson, A.C.A., of 9 Wimpole Street, London W1, be reprimanded.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that James Donald Morris, a fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of Clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that (a) he failed within a reasonable time or at all to deal with or answer repeated requests made to him by the accountants acting for Mr X in relation to the affairs of the said Mr X for whom he previously acted as accountant (b) he failed to implement his verbal assurance given to the Institute on September 6th; 1967, that matters would be attended to within seven days of the said date (c) he failed to reply within a reasonable time to five letters dated July 12th, 1967, July 24th, 1967, July 31st, 1967, September 14th, 1967, and September 27th, 1967, addressed to him by an Assistant Secretary of the Institute, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against James Donald Morris, F.C.A., had been proved under all headings and the Committee ordered that James Donald Morris, F.C.A., of 16 Market Place, Leek, Staffordshire, be reprimanded.

Taxation

SIR W. ROBSON BROWN asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount raised by taxation on companies during the financial years 1965-66 and 1966-67, and the total amounts raised during the same periods by income tax and surtax on earned incomes and on unearned incomes, respectively.

Mr HAROLD LEVER: The following estimates refer to the sectors on the National Income Accounts:

	£ mi 1965–66	£, million 1965–66 1966–67
Taxes on income paid by companies	2	926
Income tax paid by persons (includ- ing non-residents	- s)
divided as follows	s: 3,410	3,424
(i) earned income (ii) investment		2,588
income	. 1,089	836
Surtax	. 204	244

Notes:

(1) Tax on dividends and interest is treated as paid by the recipients of such

(2) It is not possible to split the receipts of surtax between earned and investment incomes.

Taxation: Scotland

MRS EWING asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will break down the estimated figures of taxation collected in Scotland in 1967 into the amount derived from income tax and the remaining headings of tax, stating in each case the amount under each

Mr HAROLD LEVER: The total amount of taxation excluding surtax collected in Scotland, which is not, of course, a good measure of the amount paid by residents of Scotland, was just under £700 million in 1967. The table below gives details as available.

Income Tax

MR TED FLETCHER asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is aware that outstanding income tax, that had been cancelled in 1939 when a person joined Her Majesty's forces, is now being deducted from post-war credits; and what instructions he has issued to his staff on this matter.

Mr Harold Lever: I assume that my hon, friend is referring to cancellations of tax for 1942-43 or any earlier year under the Income Tax (Offices and Employments) Act 1944. Any cancellation of tax due for 1941-42 the first year of post-war credits, or for 1942-43, would reduce the credit otherwise due for that year. I would be glad to look into the facts of any particular case which my hon. friend has in mind.

SIR C. OSBORNE asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated annual cost of reducing the standard rate of income tax from 8s 3d. to 7s &d, 6s &d and 5s, respectively.

Mr HAROLD LEVER: If the reductions were confined to the standard rate £204 million, £476 million and £1,042 million on the basis of the 1967-68 Budget estimates. The third figure assumes that the higher reduced rate of income tax (now 6s in the f.) would be abolished.

Mrs Ewing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost to the Exchequer in the tax year 1966-67 of income tax rebates on interest paid on house mortgages; and how this cost was distributed among England, Scotland and Wales.

Mr Harold Lever: The cost for the whole of the United Kingdom was about £157 million, made up of about £2 million for Northern Ireland, £145 million for England, £5 million for Scotland and £5 million for Wales.

Companies Act 1948: Accountants

MR FORD asked the President of the Board of Trade what steps he took to ensure that full and careful consideration was given to the application by the Association of International Accountants for recognition under section 161 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948.

Mr DARLING: I can assure my hon. friend that I gave full and careful consideration to the application.

Mr Ford asked the President of the Board of Trade what discussions he has had with certain bodies of accountants pursuant to his undertakings given in Standing Committee E on March 21st, 1967.

Mr DARLING: The Board of Trade invited the bodies in question to apply for recognition under section 161(1)(a)of the Companies Act 1948. The applications of two of the bodies have been rejected. The application of the third is being examined. I have received a deputation from the Association of International Accountants and have undertaken to consider some further representations from this body.

OBITUARY Arthur Stanley Boyd F.C.A.

The death occurred at the age of 54 on Tuesday of last week, after a long illness, of Mr Arthur Stanley Boyd, F.C.A., immediate Past President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland and senior partner in the firm of Atkinson & Boyd, Chartered Accountants, of Belfast.

The son of the late Mr Hugh Boyd, C.B.E., F.C.A., who was President of the Irish Institute in 1935-37, Mr Boyd was born in Belfast on February 3rd, 1914. Educated at Campbell College, Belfast, he was admitted to membership of the Irish Institute in 1937, gaining First Place in the Intermediate examination and First Place with Honours and the Institute Gold Medal in the Final examination. Both he and his twin brother, Chesley, who passed the Institute examinations at the same time, became partners in Atkinson & Boyd in 1937.

In 1949 Mr Boyd became a member of the committee of the Belfast Society of Chartered Accountants and was Chairman of the Society in 1957 and 1958. He was co-opted to the Council of the Institute in June 1957, and became Vice-President of the Institute in 1965 and President in 1966. For a number of years he acted as an Institute examiner, and he presented papers at Institute conferences and at the European Congress of Accountants held in Edinburgh in 1963.

During the Second World War he served as an officer in the Royal Artillery and was later with the Military Government in Germany.

MANCHESTER CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr H. B. Vanstone, J.P., F.C.A., a partner in Thornton Baker & Co, Chartered Accountants, was elected President of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce at a meeting of the board of directors held on Monday of this week.

Mr Vanstone first became associated with the Chamber when he accepted an invitation to join the Commercial Law Committee in 1956. He became its chairman, and thus a director of the Chamber, in 1960 and relinquished the chairmanship in 1965. He was appointed to the executive committee of the board in 1961, becoming hon. treasurer in 1965 and Vice-President in 1966

Mr Vanstone has served for a number of years on the Council and on the Taxation Committee of the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. He is a Justice of the Peace on the Manchester City Bench, and a Past President of the Manchester Reform Club, the Manchester Luncheon Club, and the Manchester Chartered Accountants Students' Society.

FOUR FINANCIAL COURSES

The Polytechnic School of Management Studies has arranged four finance-orientated seminars. They are: "The taxation of companies', a one-week course (mornings only) from February 19th to 23rd and from June 17th to 21st; 'Balance sheet interpretation', a one-day course on March 18th, May 10th and July 5th; 'Financial management', a two-week residential course, from May 13th to 24th, and 'Discounted cash flow', a one-day seminar on March 1st and May 29th.

The first course has been planned for members of industrial and commercial organizations who are already well versed in taxation and have a working knowledge of income tax. The discounted cash flow course is designed for accountants and commercial managers concerned with evaluating their companies' investment funds. The director for both of these courses is Mr M. G. Wright, B.COM., A.A.C.C.A., F.C.C.S.

The aim of the balance sheet interpretation course is to provide managers with the ability to interpret a company's performance from its published accounts, and the financial management course is concerned with helping managers to understand recent techniques of analysis which can be applied to a firm's financial problems. Both these courses will be directed by Mr R. F. J. Dewhurst, M.A., A.C.A.

Applications to attend should be made to The Polytechnic School of Management Studies, 32–38 Wells Street, London W1. Telephone 580 0471.

LOCAL AUTHORITY SERVICES

The cost last year for local authorities in maintaining police and fire services totalled £193 million, an increase of £48.5 million or just under 34 per cent in the last three years. This is shown in two statistical returns published by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and the Society of County Treasurers.

The percentage increase in expenditure for both services has been almost identical over the last three years. Fire services expenditure has risen by £12 million or 33.5 per cent to £49 million and police force expenditure has risen by £36.5 million or 33.9 per cent to £144 million in this period.

The return on police force statistics includes details of the expenditure of all police authorities in England and Wales other than Metropolitan and City of London police forces. Expenditure on salaries and wages absorbs about three-quarters of the total for the service. There is now one policeman for every 608 people and the average cost per policeman is $f_{2,205,168}$.

The statistics for fire authorities in England and Wales show that the authorized full-time establishment has risen by 12.5 per cent over the last three years, and the number of full-time personnel by 5 per cent to 25,228.

Despite the rising expenditure of both services they are still relatively cheap. The weekly cost per head of population is about 18 3d for police and just under 5d for fire.

Copies of the above returns are obtainable from The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants, I Buckingham Place, London SWI, price 10s each.

O.E.C.D. VIEWS ON FRENCH AND SWISS ECONOMIES

The need to stimulate the economies of France and Switzerland this year are made in two surveys issued by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (H.M.S.O. price 5s 6d each).

The report on France states that the country's economic development in the second half of 1966 and 1967 was undoubtedly affected by the failure of the German economy to show an upturn - more than other countries she was affected by the economic trend in Germany. If consumer demand in 1968 is still insufficient and the danger of unjustified price increases has been avoided, it is pointed out that the Government may have to consider budgetary measures to stimulate the economy, notably by temporary tax reductions. The development of the economy in 1967 is discussed in Part I of the report, and the outlook for 1968 is dealt with in Part II and it concludes with a summary of the problems confronting French economic policy.

For the past four years the Swiss authorities have been concerned with containing the expansion of domestic demand and restricting the intake of foreign labour according to the survey on Switzerland. Both these objectives have now been achieved and from a substantial importer of goods and foreign labour, the country has again become an important exporter.

The report warns, however, that the expected modest recovery in 1968 of world trade would probably be insufficient to restore a normal rate of growth in the country's economy and that the authorities should be prepared among other things to stimulate demand by speeding up public spending programmes if an acceleration in world economic activity does not materialize. After a review of the rules on the immigration and employment of foreigners in Part I of the report, Part II deals with the impact of foreign labour movements on the economy. Parts III and IV deal with recent economic developments and Part V discusses prospects and policy require-

"That looks just like me" said Alice as she gazed into the mirror. Puzzling over the reflection, her brow creased into tiny furrows. Through the looking glass Alice's image wore the same perplexed look.

"Why, we even think alike" said Alice to herself. "If only we could get together, how much better we should be!" She pressed her face to the glass, but her twin stayed obstinately on the other side. "Oh dear" sighed Alice, "There must be a way".

Alice's dilemma is shared by many businessmen who appreciate the advantages of a merger but are deterred by the legal and financial complications. Neville are widely experienced in such matters and their skilled advice on mergers and reconstructions is freely available.

Butterworths 1968 Budget Tax Tables

Ready within a few days of the Budget Speech

Edited by P. A. Hogger, F.A.C.C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., L. Jeffrey-Cook, A.C.A., F.T.I.I., and G. Whillans, F.I.B., F.T.I.I., F.R.Econ.S.

The 1968 Budget threatens to be the worst for many years — the Chancellor has hinted at drastic changes in anti-Evoidance provisions and such changes are bound to affect you. How will tax computation be affected by the increase in corporation tax from 40 to 42½ per cent and the change in reliefs for children? For precise, accurate, immediate and complete tabular coverage of these and the many other new proposals you will need Butterworths 1968 Budget Tax Tables. Be prepared by placing your order in advance.

Butterworths Alphabetical Guide to Stamp Duties

Edited by J. W. Pryke of Butterworths Editorial Staff

This reference book is arranged under all the heads of charge at present in use, and conveniently sub-divided under separate headings. Each entry describes the duty payable in any particular case and is followed by notes which, in addition to mentioning any special points of law and practice involved, provide references to case law of importance. There are also useful cross-references. The new edition takes account of the amendments to Stamp Duties brought about by the 1967 Finance Act.

Encouraging Competition

THE major British legislative effort to uphold the teachings of ADAM SMITH on the virtues of competition is incorporated in the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1956. It has not taken long, however, even for those unfamiliar with the United States Federal efforts in the same field, to learn that monopoly is chameleon-like in its capacity to adapt to changes in the legal environment.

One of the major weaknesses of the 1956 Act was the absence of any restriction on what are known as 'information agreements'. Such arrangements have ensured that each manufacturer and supplier was apprized of any change in his competitors' prices. Not surprisingly, 'price' competition remains limited in scope.

To stimulate competition the President of the Board of Trade intends to introduce a new Bill amending the 1956 Act to require any information agreement to be registered. Failure to register agreements will incur financial penalties and, where any person can show that he has been harmed by an agreement prior to its registration, he will be able to claim damages.

When, however, prices are regulated by reference to agreements approved by the Prices and Incomes Board, or where similar arrangements are deemed as beneficial to the economy albeit not vetted by the P.I.B., agreements are exempt from registration.

Proof of the pudding is invariably in the eating and this must be the interim judgement on the Government's latest effort to strengthen its anti-monopoly legislation and at the same time make its prices policy more effective. Even so, it will be surprising if the amendment proves more than marginally effective.

The fact is, that for all the talk about 'competition' the average industrialist is more likely to condemn 'cut-throat' competition and praise the virtues of a well-ordered market. Price competition tends nowadays to be replaced by intensive advertising ranging from the virtues of after-sales service to 'special offers' and gifts.

Critics of this state of affairs tend to overlook the significant – albeit selective – benefits which restraint of competition provides. Stability of earnings, the possibility of riding out periodic recessions without displacing too much labour, the toleration of labour practices which do more to increase the size of the pay-packet than productivity – these all accrue from well-ordered market conditions. On the other hand, effective price competition would strengthen resistance of employers to unreasonable wage demands and encourage a more efficient utilization of labour. In these respects the proposals are fully consistent with the Government's objectives relating to incomes and productivity.

Taxes in the Common Market – a Pointer for Britain?

T is difficult not to admire the constancy of the European Economic Commission in Brussels. Despite national idiosyncracies within the Common Market, the technocrats in Brussels plod steadily forward towards the goal of Europeanization of policy. M Gerard Hutchings of the Commission, in an address to the British Branch of the International Fiscal Association reproduced elsewhere in this issue, has surveyed the progress to date in the work of the Commission in the field of tax harmonization.

Those of our readers who have been studying the movement in the European Community towards the harmonization of taxes in the indirect field must be impressed with the way in which the Commission has persevered in pressing forward towards the objective of an added-value tax (T.V.A.) coupled with the abolition of fiscal frontiers in the customs field.

The European Community, acting through the Council of Ministers, has fixed January 1st, 1970, as the final date by which each member country must bring in an added-value tax. By January 1st, 1969, the European Commission has to submit a directive to the Council of Ministers on the methods to be adopted in the abolition of fiscal frontiers. This will be the peak of achievement in the indirect tax field. Movements of goods across the national frontiers within the Common Market will no longer be regarded as exports, but as sales in a domestic market. In other words T.V.A. will become a final tax in the country of origin and the fiscal frontiers which have replaced the customs frontiers will themselves be abolished. Clearly, some supra-national fund will have to be set up to satisfy. those member countries which lose substantial taxation by the substitution of tax in the country of origin for tax in the country of destination.

It is interesting, after all the ebb and flow of discussion at Brussels on the added-value tax, that Germany has introduced the tax as from January 1st, this year and France is extending the T.V.A. through to the retail stage. The Netherlands is to apply the T.V.A. at 12 per cent from January 1st, 1969, down to the retail stage, and Italy is planning a tax at 10 per cent down to the wholesale stage. In Belgium and Luxembourg the T.V.A. is still at the planning stage. After all the labours of Sisyphus, T.V.A. seems likely to be universally adopted in the Community by January 1st, 1970.

The next major task at Brussels will be to harmonize direct taxation. In this connection it is clear that the Common Market countries regard the harmonization of withholding taxes as being of special importance. The Commission has already proposed a uniform withholding tax of 25 per cent on dividends for companies within the Community.

Very soon, the Community will have to face and solve the problem of double taxation of profits and dividends. It is already causing concern at the Commission and it is significant that the discussions are already leaving the doctrinal area. It is heartening to see that the Commission is putting the emphasis on the excessive overall burden resulting from the consecutive taxation of profits and dividends – a burden that should undoubtedly be eased.

What bothers the Commission at the present time is the assortment of patterns of investment resulting from the variations within the community of different patterns of company taxation. At present the thinking of the Commission is along the lines that some mitigation of the tax burden on companies and dividends must be made either by the French and Belgian system of tax credits (a variation of the pre-1965 British system), or by the German system of splitrates (i.e. a lower tax on distributed profits). Alternatively, the Commission ultimately may well accept the double-tax system, but mitigate it by pressing for a very much lower corporation tax rate.

It is interesting that the Commission so far has limited its action to a memorandum requesting France and Belgium to modify their systems in a community spirit (in other words to extend their tax credits in a direction which would identify the French and Belgian systems more completely with the pre-1965 British system).

With Britain as a member of the Common Market in the foreseeable future, as undoubtedly she must be, what price her 1965 tax revolution then? How extensive a counter-revolution will the Community require?

Irish Institute's Examinations

THE results of the winter session examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland are now announced and the names of the successful candidates appear on other pages of this issue.

In Part V of the examination, First Place and the Harold F. Bell Prize were won by Mr R. J. Fitzgerald, of Dublin. Mr N. D. O'Carroll, of Belfast, was awarded Second Place, and Third Place was awarded to Mr N. T. MacEvilly, of Sligo.

The First Place and the Ulster Society Diamond Jubilee Prize in Part IV was won by Mr G. R. Colvin, of Belfast. Second Place was won by Mr J. G. Stitt, of Belfast, and Third Place by Mr P. D. O'Reilly, of Limerick.

In Part III, Mr C. T. O'Keeffe, of Dublin, won First Place and the Ulster Society Diamond Jubilee Prize. Mr M. J. Parte, of Belfast, was awarded Second Place, and Mr E. F. Bourke, of Dublin, Third Place.

Mr J. W. R. Jackson, of Dublin, was awarded First Place in Part II, and Second Place was awarded jointly to Mr N. H. D. Hendron, of Belfast, and Mr K. I. Ryan, of Dublin.

In Part I, First Place was won by Mr W. B. Gannon, of Ennis, Co. Clare; Second Place by Mr J. Paul, of Dungannon, Co. Tyrone, and Third Place by Mr S. D. Dobbin, of Belfast.

Pig in a Poke

K. CHESTERTON once elaborated in an amusing essay on the advantages of pigs as pets. As a variation, the Livestock Group of companies in 1959 put forward a scheme whereby 'armchair farmers' could buy pigs instead of shares. Each pig was to be identifiable by a numbered ear-tag and 'pig-holders' were to be invited to visit the farms of the group to inspect their stock. Every six months, the stock was to be 'turned over' and the proceeds reinvested in more pigs. A net profit of 10 per cent, plus the return in full of the original investment, was envisaged by the promoters.

Things somehow did not work that way and, in May 1962, Sir Norman Skelhorn, K.B.E., Q.C., and Sir William Lawson, C.B.E., B.A., F.C.A., were appointed to investigate the affairs of the six ill-fated companies involved. Their report, publication of which was deferred pending completion of criminal proceedings instituted by the Board of Trade against Mr Norman Mascall, chairman, managing director and for all practical purposes the sole shareholder in the companies in the group, has just appeared. It tells a grim tale of mismanagement of which the trading results speak for themselves.

When the companies in the group went into liquidation in July 1962, £966,000 of the £1,398,000 received from outside investors had been lost. £224,000 had been repaid (mainly as dividends) and there remained £208,000 of assets. Included in the loss of £966,000 were drawings by Mr and Mrs Mascall of £52,000 and advances for 'extraneous activities' of £60,000.

The inspectors report that with regard to the farm records, they found it 'impossible to understand the methods used in the book-keeping' and that the financial records 'were in a poor state from quite early on in the history of the group and, also, that by the time of the liquidation the financial books 'were in a deplorable state'. Sir Norman and Sir William conclude their report by asking the question 'as to whether some further protection should be given to the public who may be induced to subscribe for schemes of this kind promoted by companies with inadequate resources'.

Assistance for Hotels

THE report on Investment in Hotels and Catering (H.M.S.O. 7s net) prepared by the Economic Development Committee for Hotels and Catering merits considerable praise. It is extremely well-documented and well argued, and makes both sensible and practical recommendations. In view of the fact that half of the overseas tourist expenditure in Britain is accounted for by cost of accommodation and catering, the implications for the balance of payments of a policy aimed at improving British hotels are self-evident.

The E.D.C. inquiry, for which Cooper Brothers & Co carried out a profitability study of new hotel and catering establishments, stresses that the exclusion of the industry from the investment grants, lack of building allowances and the heavy cost of the selective employment tax, have combined to affect adversely the prospects for future hotel development. The rate of return on capital invested, according to Cooper Brothers' findings, are so low, given the general difficulties of raising capital and the high cost of borrowing against such assets, as to make the future prospects for any prospective investor decidedly unattractive.

The committee rejects arguments for special assistance to the industry. Instead it recommends that investment grants, industrial building allowances and the provisions of development area legislation should be extended to the industry. In addition, the Board of Trade should extend its hotel loan scheme by removing the overseas visitors earnings requirement, lengthen the period of repayment of any loan as well as increasing its amount in relation to the capital cost, and defer repayment of, and interest payments on, such loans for the first three years. The Chancellor will have an opportunity on March 19th to implement some of these sensible recommendations.

Commercial Views on the Budget

ANOTABLE addition to the serious advice tendered to the Chancellor of late is signified by the letter he has received from the Association of British Chambers of Commerce. This endorses the trend in favour of indirect taxation and makes a strong plea for recognition of the contribution to the national prosperity made by the majority of close companies and their dependence in many cases on directors for financial aid. Several instances are cited in which current tax rules on the relationship of directors and close companies inhibit their potential growth.

In his letter, the President of the Association, Sir Robert A. Maclean, deprecates the bias against service and non-manufacturing industries and makes a plea for the progressive elimination of stamp duties. Annexed to the letter are numerous technical representations which, in terse terms, castigate the major defects shown by the practical working of corporation tax and capital gains tax.

The irrevocable character of the option to select the April 1965 valuation of assets, in lieu of cost, is denounced as little more than a sham, and attention is drawn to the curious penal consequence that follows where a loan is repaid by a company to an individual who is the settlor of a connected settlement.

Again, the complex anti-avoidance provisions in connection with dividend-stripping catch operations innocent in themselves, particular mention being made of the hazards attaching to bonus or rights issues and group reorganizations. Also welcome is a suggestion for a more commercial approach to property expenses through the reversal of the decision in Pyne v. Stallard-Penoyre (43 A.T.C. 373) which precluded relief where rent receipts were embezzled.

£1 Million Bonus for Industry

Less than ten weeks since the decision by the House of Lords in Lord Advocate (for Minister of Labour) v. Reliant Tool Co, the Ministry of Labour have thrown wide the door to further claims from firms similarly placed. It will be recalled that the Reliant Tool Co was in business designing machine tools on a contract basis for manufacturers such as Rolls Royce, Singer, Remington, Massey Ferguson and others. In the Court of Session it had been observed that section 1 (2) (a) of the Selective Employment Payments Act 1966 referred to an establishment engaged by way of business, a turn of phrase wider than is connoted by 'manufacturing', the term which introduces the processes enumerated under minimum list heading 332 – Metalworking Machine Tools – in the Standard Industrial Classification.

The Ministry of Labour state that they are now able to consider applications by employers whose functions are similar to those of the Reliant Tool Co with a view to registration of their establishments. Those registered will become entitled to payments, and as regards eligible establishments that have been operating since September 5th, 1966, payments may be back-dated to that date if the necessary records have been maintained. All inquiries and applications from employers in this field of industry should be made to their local employment exchange.

The cost of applying the new ruling is expected to be about £1 million a year. The premium (e.g. 32s 6d for men) is only payable generally up to the end of March 1968 and thereafter will be confined to the development areas, being replaced by straight refunds elsewhere (25s a week for men).

When Paper is not Money

THE ruling noted above, however, should be treated with caution. Not all activities on the threshold of manufacture qualify as such. In Carfax Waste Paper Co Ltd v. Minister of Labour, the Court held that a company engaged in the sorting of waste paper was not engaged in manufacturing so as to qualify for repayment of selective employment tax and premium, although leave to appeal was granted.

The difficulty, it seems, is that of determining when a process of manufacture has begun, but in general is may be said to begin with some working on the raw material. Anything before that is preliminary or ancillary to the manufacturing process and not part of it. Nevertheless, as the Reliant Tool Co decision shows, it is possible for an activity to rank as 'manufacturing' because it forms an integral part of the activity of manufacturing, even though not carried on by an establishment which produces the tangible article.

Previous decisions of the Industrial Tribunal adverse to the waste industry were reached in Sterling Products Ltd v. Minister of Labour, despite a substantial export trade in prepared metals, and in I. Goldman Ltd v. Minister of Labour concerning garment manufacturer's cuttings destined for use in other manufacturing processes — a decision notable for a review by the Tribunal of numerous authorities. Perhaps the only firm conclusion possible is that the selective employment tax is likely to engender yet further litigation.

London Accountants' Tax Conference

A RESIDENTIAL tax conference which provided expert comment and provoked stimulating discussion was held last week-end by the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants at the Hotel Metropole, Brighton.

Attended by over three hundred members, the conference, which had as its theme 'Tax and the small business', was presided over by Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A., and was opened by Mr R. McNeil, F.C.A., a Past President of the Institute. The first paper was given by Mr E. E. Ray, B.COM., F.C.A., on 'Partnerships – problems' in which he covered, among other matters, service companies, companies in partnership, provision for retirement and estate duty. Mr J. S. Heaton, F.C.A., a member of the Council of the Institute, in a paper entitled 'Close companies – more problems', examined the scope for development of close companies. He also included in his address specific references to rearrangements to minimize liability and commented on aspects relating to distributions, loans and advances.

Mr K. S. Carmichael, F.C.A., took as the title of his paper 'The shortfall battles', in which he dealt with the procedure and present requirements in applying for clearance under paragraph 11, Schedule 18 of the 1965 Finance Act. He also spoke on the actions most likely to cause shortfall problems such as the repayment of loans, buying investments and the purchase of assets from shareholders. Mr E. C. Meade, F.C.A., in a paper on 'Unquoted shares – capital gains tax provisions', examined the use of market value, shares deemed to be acquired on April 6th, 1965, and part disposal of shares held on and after that date. He also included references to bonus and rights issues and anti-avoidance provisions. The final paper was given by Professor G. S. A. Wheatcroft, M.A.(OXON.), F.T.I.I., F.B.I.M., on 'Minimizing taxes through trusts'. After dealing with the various taxes involved in trusts, he then elaborated on the taxes on individuals – income tax, surtax, estate duty and capital gains tax – and referred to corporation tax on private companies.

High Fire Wastage

FIRE wastage in Britain during 1967 is estimated to have topped the £90 million mark, which is an all-time record. The figure estimated by the British Insurance Association for 1966 was £82.4 million. These estimates do not include consequential losses of any kind, such as stoppage of work, lost orders and general disorganization – which might well add a further £100 million to the cost of fire to the country.

There are three main reasons for the rising cost. Inflation clearly accounts for higher values at risk; higher productivity increases the aggregate amount at risk, and finally, insurers are convinced that more complex production methods and larger units are also responsible for the higher fire bill.

Expressed as a percentage of the gross domestic product, the material damage caused in 1967 was 0.27 per cent. It was at the same level in 1964, actually dropping in 1965 and 1966 to 0.24 per cent and 0.26 per cent respectively.

Although detailed figures for 1967 are not yet available, it is almost certain that the chief cause of fire was electrical installations and the misuse of appliances. Second place will probably once again be taken by malicious damage, with smoking coming next in order of cost. Only in fourth place are process losses, due to hazardous processes etc. in industry.

Insurers are continuing their review of premium rates and the chemical and textile industries, among others, can expect to pay higher premiums in the nottoo-distant future. On the other hand, there may be some reductions in premium in the case of office blocks and the like.

Despite the rise in fire wastage, fire insurers are expected to have had a better year with home fire business than in 1966 – when some companies made worth-while profits. Premium income in 1968 will be boosted still further by the introduction of the average clause into policies, which has been taking place since July last year.

Incentives and Penalties

URRENT discussion on whether tax reductions would infuse new life into management and executives tends often to miss the point, contends Professor A. J. Merrett, of the London Graduate School of Business Studies, writing in the current issue of The Director. In his opinion, the issue is not whether individuals will work harder given more takehome pay, but whether the existence of substantial rewards for the successful manager would encourage a higher quality recruit to come into the profession of management. At the same time, there is a tendency to overlook the point that, when a man cannot be adequately remunerated for taking substantial risks, he can hardly be penalized for his mistakes. On the other hand, when the stakes are high and the prize worth having, there will always be those who will back their judgement and, if they fail, accept the penalty.

It is hardly accidental that so many graduates regard a career in industry as inferior to one in academic life or the Civil Service. Quite apart from the high social status accorded the latter professions and the lower status enjoyed by industry – a relic surely of the Victorian attitude to 'trade' – the financial incentives to exchange security for life for a short-term contract and the likelihood of dismissal are hardly adequate. For, as Professor Merrett's survey among managers and directors points out, 'generally well over 50 per cent of any bonus payments made to executives would be absorbed by taxation', and the possibility of giving substantial financial incentives is obviously severely limited.

Professor Merrett notes that among many younger managers the financial anxiety of trying to meet the financial commitments inherent in their choice of social standards, e.g. private education for their children, may already be impairing their complete involvement in their work. At the same time, given their inability to accumulate savings or make large 'killings' under the existing tax system, it was 'not practical to talk in terms of tightening up management discipline to enforce higher standards of management efficiency'. In other words, as in every other field, we get what we pay for. If we do not pay enough to attract first-class managers, we need hardly be surprised if we don't get them.

Merger Difficulties

WHATEVER the recent spate of mergers, actual and prospective, is doing to attract public attention to Stock Exchange activity, it is far less evident that there is any comparable consideration of the wider implications, as distinct from the financial, of actual or mooted mergers. The case for mergers is often strong; unity is strength, not least in industry. Rationalization of output and selling can make a considerable difference to the profitability of integrated undertakings.

On the other hand, the cake is not made without breaking some eggs. The most obvious problem is that of redundancy. Recent events in Coventry and in Woolwich make it clear that higher efficiency is to be bought only at a price. It may well be that the existing undertakings would not be able to survive in an increasingly competitive market. It is equally selfevident that unless the management press ahead with the rationalization of production the raison d'être for many mergers will be ignored. For example, in the announcement of the proposed merger between the National Provincial and Westminster banks, it was stated that there would be no redundancies, while in the latest merger proposals between Barclays, Lloyds and Martins it seems that not merely will there not be redundancies, but there will be a demand for additional

All this may be true. One must also assume that boards of directors do not make bids or suggest mergers simply because it may help eliminate competition or make some use, albeit not the most effective, of financial resources which a discriminatory distribution tax charge enables successful companies to accumulate. The pace of acquisition in the textile and fibres industries is impressive and one can but hope that the process of assimilation and consolidation is proving equally rapid.

In the last resort, however, it is difficult for either employee, shareholder, or the intelligent observer of the industrial scene, to make a rational assessment of any merger, simply because the facts are not available. The average circular to shareholders inviting their acceptance of an offer, or informing them of their company's intention to acquire another undertaking, does little to enable such an assessment to be made. One can hardly expect the Board of Trade to investigate and examine every take-over, but the time is nigh when there should be some impartial body which should be in a position to require the relevant information and make an objective assessment of both the social and financial implications of any major merger.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

PASSING through the hotel lounge I met Harold. He hadn't changed much over the years. Burly as ever, though his hair was showing thicker streaks of grey, he still had the same alert stare and the same quick tread.

He said: 'Hi! how're things?' I said: 'Fine. Keeping fit?' We both nodded in off-hand style, murmured 'See you', and went on our ways, I to a lecture on the forthcoming Budget prospects, he to dinner in the banqueting hall. There were three other executive types with him, all looking self-confident and affluent with no time for casual chit-chat.

We were good friends once, Harold and I. He had been a salesman in a neighbouring furnishing and hardware stores which purveyed everything from chisels and beaten brass fire-screens to refrigerators and dining-room suites. His store did good business but his commission didn't tot up to maintain him in the standard of living he wanted, so after some argument he resigned and set up on his own.

It was hard going at first. He had an impressive personality as his basic capital, plus a couple of good agencies as his liquid assets, but they were balanced by a heavy initial bank overdraft. Profits were slower and smaller than he anticipated, debtors less prompt in payment, and he was shaken by the stunning impact of the tax inspector's demands.

At his wit's end, he came to me for help, so I put in a book-keeping system, pressed his debtors, pleaded with his bank manager and negotiated tax assessments on his behalf. There was a bleak month or so when only my guarantee of some £300 in overdraft stood between him and bankruptcy, but he struggled on over the hump. At length, success came in full.

Harold was grateful and appreciative. We kept in close touch when he formed his own company, when he took over two competitors, and when he built his new factory. He needed management advice and close control of money matters then, so he invited me to become financial director on a part-time basis.

I was delighted. Here was a chance to contribute genuine help where help was needed, to be an active participant, to meet new challenges and taste the joys of success. . . . I sought the formal approval of our chairman, assuming that he'd feel pleased.

He was shocked! Company staff were expected to devote all their time and energies to their own jobs, he expostulated. He'd never before had a secretary or accountant actively involved in outside activities and he couldn't possibly tolerate it. The part-time element was irrelevant. My name appearing on Harold's board could possibly compromise the company by implying some sort of business relationship. No; positively no.

I, in turn, was stunned. I couldn't see his point at all. If my work didn't suffer, if I could cope with the two jobs satisfactorily, then ancient precedents shouldn't matter, I remonstrated. An accountant's natural and anticipated road to success in due course led to suitable directorships, and since this distinction apparently wasn't feasible in our own firm, then it shouldn't be prohibited elsewhere.

The chairman consulted his co-directors, who unanimously supported him. Positively 'no', he repeated with mounting irritation. I didn't dare say 'dog in the manger'. It was just that he'd always thought that way; a company secretary should know his place and stick to it. There was also, I think, an underlying resentment; as if in some way the suggested appointment was an affront to his pride.

So Harold found another financial man to handle his affairs, and we drifted apart. I'd probably have made a fortune if I'd backed my luck and made the break there and then. But that's the way the cookie crumbles, as they say nowadays.

D-Day for Decimal Currency

DESPITE pleas to start afresh in a new financial year and to avoid a mid-month change with its attendant accounting problems, Decimal Day is to be Monday, February 15th, 1971.

The designs of the new coins both in bronze and cupronickel are now approved and some coins will be issued later this year.

The banks will close from Wednesday night, February 10th, 1971, until they re-open for business on D-Day. The present $\frac{1}{2}d$ will cease to be legal tender from August 1st, 1969, and the half-crown from January 1st, 1970. A 50 new penny coin has not yet been finalized but will replace the present ten shilling note before D-Day. The pound note, of course, remains in circulation.

These, briefly, were the announcements made at a Press conference last week by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Roy Jenkins, based on the recommendations from the Decimal Currency Board under the chairmanship of Lord

Fiske.

Helping the banks

The reason for choosing the Monday in the middle of February was stated to be that this was the quietest time for business, and the beginning or end of the month was inconvenient for the banks. As has been shown in the past week, however, business and industry have other views, and there has been considerable criticism of a mid-February change.

The banks will, of course, play a vital role in the changeover as they will switch immediately to decimals on the actual day of change, and will need the few days' closure to clear all the cheques in the pipeline and to carry out the conversion of accounts from £ s d to the new currency. In addition to the banks, the Post Office and most

In addition to the banks, the Post Office and most Government departments will also change on the appointed day, together with many sections of commerce and industry. But a wholesale change will depend on how many shops have had their cash registers converted, or how many businesses their accounting machines.

The vending companies now have at least the basic information on which to start designing their conversions.

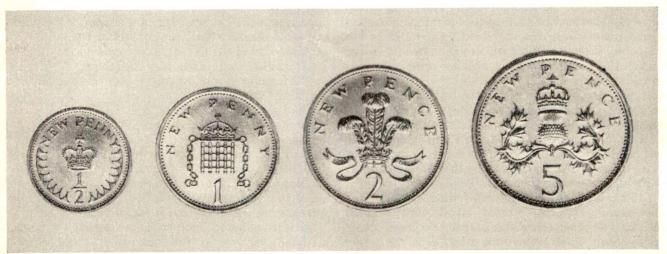

Change-over period

The change-over period during which both currencies will be legal tender has been variously estimated at times ranging from a few months to two years, but this will depend very much on the pace of conversions and whether these are phased through manufacturers during the next three years or flooded in at the last minute.

The 5 and 10 new penny pieces will be minted by the late spring or early summer of this year and will become legal tender on issue. They will circulate alongside the shilling

Obverse and reverse of the 10 new penny piece. The lion passant royally crowned is part of the crest of England. The effigy of the Queen, which will be common to all the new coins, is that by Arnold Machin which already appears on many Commonwealth and florin pieces that they will eventually replace, as they will be identical in shape and weight.

Illustrated above are the half new penny on which the Royal Crown is depicted; the new penny which shows a portcullis with chains royally crowned (a badge of King Henry VII); the 2 new penny piece with the badge of the Prince of Wales, and the 5 new penny piece showing the badge of Scotland – a thistle royally crowned.

The reason for dropping the $\frac{1}{2}d$ from circulation is that it is similar in size to the 2 new penny piece (value 5d) and could cause confusion if both were in circulation together. The half-crown is to go for a slightly different reason. Its value would be $12\frac{1}{2}$ new pence, an awkward amount. So by removing it, the vending industry know that all machines must be converted or replaced by the end of 1969. It is possible that a 20 or 25 new penny coin might be produced later if demand justified it.

Decimal coin sets will be sold to the public, probably in plastic wallets with information about the designs and the Decimal Currency Board. There will be two sets: a set of five (the $\frac{1}{2}$, 1, 2, 5 and 10 new pence) and a set of six including the 50 new penny coin.

So these are the decisions announced to date, but they leave more questions unanswered than they solve. What about the methods of expressing amounts on cheques? What symbols will be used to replace the present f_a s d in books of account and on financial stationery? – a point raised by Mr D. Garbutt in this journal on February 10th.

How will the decimal fraction be expressed? By the continental comma (35,29) or by the American point (35,29)? And how will this impossible $\frac{1}{2}$ new penny be expressed? (If we are to decimalize correctly – that is, adopt a metric expression of currency – then it should be £0.005.)

How will cash-books be ruled? With one money column only? Or two – one for pounds, one for new pence? Or three – one for pounds, new pence and ½ new pence? And will cash-books show both currencies for a year or so before and after the change-over?

Many of these questions have been asked and are likely to be answered in the near future; but there are many others, such as whether conversion tables will be given the force of law and what will happen to the legality of contracts and bills drawn up in f, f, which can only be answered by a further Decimal Currency Act at some future date.

Premiums, Leases and Taxation – II

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

In last week's article the position was examined of a landlord who receives a payment on the grant of a lease or by way of commutation, variation or waiver. Where such a receipt is payable by instalments, a claim may be made by the landlord chargeable under Case VIII or the person chargeable under Case VI to have each instalment taxed as rent in lieu of the foregoing provisions. Such a claim must be made to the inspector before the end of the year of assessment next following that in which entitlement to the first instalment arises. However, 'instalment rent' ('226') has special characteristics, in particular, no collection by reference to the preceding year under section 16 (2) of the Finance Act 1963 is permitted.

The deduction of betterment levy is effected by reducing each instalment in the same ratio as for a class 221 premium, in priority to the deduction allowed for duration. Moreover, the rules in section 369 of the Income Tax Act 1952 for taxation of non-residents in the name of agents are excluded and instead where payment is made, whether in the United Kingdom or elsewhere, directly to a person whose usual place of abode is outside the United Kingdom, the payment is brought within the scope of section 170 if it is one chargeable under Case VIII or Case VI.

It may be noted that the inspector is empowered to require (by written notice) from any lessee or occupier past or present, including any person having or having had the use of land, to give such information as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue as to the terms applying to the lease, occupation or use of the land, including production of any written instrument embodying those terms, and information as to any consideration given for the grant or assignment to him of the tenancy.

Moreover, any person who as agent manages land or is in receipt of rent or other payments arising from land may be required to supply the inspector with such particulars relating to payments arising therefrom as may be specified in the notice. Failure to comply may attract a maximum penalty of £50, not enforceable if the default is remedied before proceedings are commenced but augmented by a £10 daily penalty if continued after judgment (section 46, Finance Act 1960).

Anti-avoidance measures

This may be the place to notice a special extension of the terms of section 412 of the Income Tax Act 1952 which are made to apply for the purpose of preventing the avoidance by any person ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom of liability to tax under the foregoing rules by means of transfers of assets by virtue or in consequence whereof, either alone or in conjunction with associated operations, income becomes payable to a person resident in the Republic of Ireland but not resident in the United Kingdom.

Under the terms of the agreement with the Republic embodied in Schedule 18 of the 1952 Act, exemption from United Kingdom tax is accorded to a person in that category and it appears that the deeming provisions of section 25 (3) of the Finance Act 1963 are designed to counteract action whereby any United Kingdom resident person has by means of any such transfers or operations as are mentioned above acquired any rights by virtue of which he has the power to enjoy (in the context of section 412) whether forthwith or in the future, amounts under the five classes which escape the impact of Case VIII through the absence hitherto of a corresponding charge under Irish law.

Relief for previous chargeable occasion

The other side of the coin concerns the position where tax has become chargeable as above (or would have become thus chargeable were it not for an exemption from tax or an election for the '226' instalment basis) and a subsequent occasion of charge arises in relation to the same premises during the duration of the original occasion. Unless an election for the instalment basis is then made, or could be made (possibly a reference to the time limit of less than two years) there is scope for the reduction or elimination of the impact of tax on the second occasion.

In principle what is available is an allowance equal to the proportion (on a time basis) of the earlier charge, real or potential, attributable to the period of duration used in computing the later charge, 'duration' being determined in accordance with the rules appropriate to each type of premium within the five classes and also class 231 (paragraph 8 of Schedule 4, Finance Act 1963). However, relief is not available in relation to a class 222 charge to the extent that this reflects the carrying out of work ranking for capital allowances under Parts X or XI of the Income Tax Act 1952.

The general rule for class 241 in this context is that duration is to be taken as the period beginning with the sale and ending on the date fixed under the terms of the sale as the date of the reconveyance (or grant of a lease after an interval exceeding one month) or, if that date is not fixed, ending with the earliest date at which the reconveyance or grant could take place in accordance with the terms of the sale.

However, where the reconveyance or grant takes place at a price different from that taken in calculating the amount or on a date different from that taken in determining the period in respect of which the amount arose, retrospective adjustments are to be made and are valid if effected within the time limits applicable to tax for the year of assessment in which the reconveyance or grant takes place.

Intermediate landlords and traders

There is a primary mode of giving relief which is appropriate if the proportion of the earlier charge thus computed is less than or equal to the charge arising on the later occasion, in which event the latter charge is reduced or eliminated. If, however, there remains a residue of the earlier charge not absorbed in this manner, then it ranks for relief by a secondary method. This is to allow a deduction in the computation of rent chargeable under Case VIII as if the daily proportion of the excess antecedent charge were rent paid, becoming due from day to day, a rule which contrasts with the usual quarterly due dates for rents receivable or payable where the accounts basis concession is not applied (see paragraph 9 (2), Schedule 4, Finance Act 1062).

In the past businessmen were discouraged from paying a premium for a lease through the absence of tax relief for such payments (see MacTaggart v. B. & E. Strump (4 A.T.C. 455: 10 T.C. 17)). This position has been altered as regards leases granted since April 6th, 1963, and a prospective deduction by way of notional rent payable is available, matched on a daily time apportionment basis with the charge to the recipient, although modified, on a just apportionment, to reflect trade user of less than the whole of the premises which attracted the original charge (Schedule 9, Finance Act 1963).

Although occupation for trade purposes is normally required, relief may be available if the person for the time being entitled to the lease, estate or interest as respects which the amount chargeable arose deals with his interest as property employed for the purposes of the trade. The rules are similar to those applied under Case VIII but duplication with relief obtained thereunder for the same period is not permitted.

Dealing in land

In computing the results of a trade of dealing in land, any trading receipt falling within classes 221, 223 or 224 is to be treated as reduced by the amount on which tax under Case VIII is chargeable in that connection. As regards instalments for which a 'rent' claim is made ('226') only that part of each instalment is to be included as a trading receipt which reflects betterment levy, a rule which is consistent with the deductibility of betterment levy in Case I computations. Where no claim has been made to treat instalments as rent then the amount includible in the Case I results is to be so much only of any instalments within classes 221, 223 and 224 as proportionately reflects the non-chargeable element in the aggregate amount receivable (section 29 (6) (a), Finance Act 1963).

A point to note of general application is that no reduction effected in amounts chargeable by reference to betterment levy is to be taken into consideration in arriving at the amount of the antecedent charge for the purpose of measuring the relief either for landlords or for traders. Moreover, individuals may claim the 'top-slicing' relief available under Schedule 6 to the Finance Act 1963.

Capital gains tax

As a general rule, for capital gains tax purposes, a lease becomes a wasting asset at the time when its duration does not exceed fifty years. If, however, at the beginning of the period of ownership of a lease it is subject to a sublease not at a rack-rent, e.g., a groundrent, at the end of which the value of the main lease exceeds the expenditure otherwise allowable on a disposal, then a 'wasting' character is not acquired until the end of the duration of the sublease. For this purpose the estimate required of the terminal value of the lease is to be made as at the commencement, a rule which it seems enables the comparison of value with expenditure to be effected in comparable monetary units.

It should be borne in mind that in arriving at the current use value of land (meaning a freehold interest or any lease of land) it is to be assumed that planning permission would be granted only for developments which do not constitute 'material development' (section 99 (2), Land Commission Act 1967). This assumption overrides the actual existence of planning permission in force unless it concerns the carrying out of any project of material development of the land begun but uncompleted (paragraph 1 of Schedule 14, Finance Act 1967). In that case a special rule is applied in relation to the increment in current use value attributable to the planning permission although where this affects part only of the land the permission is allocated exclusively to that part. The special rule is that in computing a gain on any subsequent disposal by the owner he is deemed to have incurred deductible expenditure equal to the increment.

Unless a contrary election is made under section 33 (3) the consideration for any disposal is to be taken as the current use value at the time, subject to the principle which would preclude the operation of that rule if the market value of the land (including, in the case of a part disposal, the part retained) fails to exceed the current use value (proviso to section 33 (1), Finance Act 1967). The measurement of current use value is governed by paragraph 6 (1) of Schedule 14.

Restrictions on expenditure deductible

In applying the rules for deduction of enhancement expenditure it is necessary to bear in mind paragraph 3 of Schedule 14 to the Finance Act 1967 which prohibits the deduction of expenditure so far as not reflected in current use value at the time of the disposal by way of enhancement of what that value would have been but for the expenditure. The restriction is carried still further by non-recognition of increases in current use value after April 5th, 1967, whether in relation to earlier expenditure or to leases granted after that date (paragraph 6 (2)).

Where there is a part disposal of a short lease by way of the grant of a sublease, it becomes necessary to apportion any admissible expenditure and for this purpose the current use value of the sublease is ascertained both on the basis of the actual rent and that of a notional rent equal to the rent payable under the lease out of which it is carved. Next the fraction derived from the 'curved line' depreciation tables in Schedule 8 to the Finance Act 1965 is ascertained and applied to the eligible expenditure in the normal manner if the sublease is a profitable one but, if the current use value on the notional basis is higher than that yielded by the computation based on actual rent from the sublease, then the ratio of these two amounts is used to scale down the amount otherwise computed as applicable to the 'disposal' which the granting of a sublease represents.

there are also rules which restrict the However, amount of the consideration brought into charge for capital gains tax purposes. In general, the amounts subjected to a charge to Case VIII tax in respect of premiums etc., as discussed above, except under class 222 (enhancement), are to be excluded from the consideration obtained on the granting of a lease, although allowed to remain in the denominator of the fraction used for part disposal calculations.

In the case of a 'short' sublease this rule is varied to permit the deduction of the amount chargeable directly by subtraction from the gain ascertained for capital gains tax purposes, subject to the familiar limitation whereby the rule is not permitted to operate so as to augment a loss or to reduce a gain below 'nil' by converting it into a loss. In this context a 'short' sublease is taken to mean a sublease granted out of a lease the duration of which did not originally exceed fifty

These reliefs are necessitated by the abrogation of the general rule precluding duplication of capital gains tax and income tax (paragraph 2 of Schedule 6, Finance Act 1965), so far as concerns items within the scope of Case VIII (Chapter I of Part II, Finance Act 1963), in particular the special classes considered in this article ('221' to '241'). As regards class 222 (enhancement) the method of relief is to treat the person as having incurred, at the time the lease was granted, expenditure of the amount chargeable under section 22 (2) ranking as a deduction for capital gains tax purposes.

Where the right to a deduction in the form of rent has arisen as above, it may happen that a loss arises to the person concerned on the disposal by way of grant of the sublease. If so, the loss as computed for capital gains tax is to be reduced by the total amount of rent allowable to him as a deduction under the rules for a 'second occasion' of charge under the five classes, although not so as to convert the loss into a gain or to. increase any gain. It may be noted also that if the original vendor exercises his right to claim a retrospective adjustment under section 24 (2) (b) of the Finance Act 1963 then any necessary amendment is to be made in the capital gains computation.

In conclusion, a brief reference should be made to section 19 and Schedule 7 of the Finance Act 1964, which are concerned with transfers after April 14th, 1964, of an estate or interest in land from one person to another whereby the transferor, or a person associated with him, becomes liable to pay rent under a lease or in other indirect circumstances. The provisions are designed to prevent the receipt of a capital sum in exchange for recurrent outgoings ranking for tax relief, if in excess of a commercial rent. (Concluded.)

Progress in Tax Harmonization in the Common Market

General Problems Division, Directorate General for Competition, E.E.C. Commission

BEFORE taking stock of the progress made in the work of the European Economic Commission in the fiscal field and in dealing with current problems, I would first like to recall the point of view from which we approach tax questions in Brussels.

Actually, there were two ways of looking at the question; the first would have been to give priority to the political arguments — to take one's stand on considerations of principle and propose tax harmonization in the context of a European structure, which from the outset would have had a political character. Seen in this light the methodical elaboration of a Community tax system would have been justified independently of activities in other fields. However, this manner of looking at things, which was perhaps conceivable in 1954 or 1955, was incompatible with the essentially economic lines on which the rapprochement of the six countries began to develop.

Action in the field was therefore undertaken from another point of view, a much more practical and empirical one, pari passu with the progress achieved in the economic and financial fields. In this way the Commission had to begin by first making sure that the free movement of goods, prepared for by the initial reductions in customs duties, was not hampered by fiscal arrangements – in particular by measures concerning turnover taxes on imports or exports. This was the origin of the studies which led to plans for a European system of tax on value added (T.V.A.) and to the examination of the problem of how to equate the various national systems of excise duties. It is also the reason why measures were found to be required as regards certain aspects of direct taxation.

Like the free movement of goods, the gradual liberalization of capital movements also makes harmonization measures necessary. A policy of healthy and free competition must allow the optimum utilization of production factors in the Community framework. Care must therefore be taken to ensure that too great differences in taxation do not provoke capital movements and the resiting of firms and investments which are not justified from the economic angle.

Finally, the working out and implementation of common policies – whether concerning the short-term economic field, medium-term forecasts or action by economic sectors – should not be hindered but should in fact be facilitated, by the tax system to which the necessary adjustments should be made. Some co-ordination of fiscal policies is accordingly going to become indispensable.

If tax problems are thus placed in the general setting of development of the Common Market, the picture of the progress made becomes clearer and we can see immediately that 1967 has been an important year. It has been the year in which the Council of Ministers of the Community took the initial decisions concerning indirect taxes by adopting the tax on value added before the abolition of the last customs duties which is due to take place on July 1st, 1968. It has also been the year in which the Commission officially submitted to the Council a general programme and more specific measures on direct taxes to meet the problems of the moment, i.e. the financing of enterprises and mergers.

I shall now tackle these two subjects, dealing first with indirect taxes and then direct taxes.

INDIRECT TAXES

As will probably be known, in February last, the Council of Ministers adopted the two directives for introducing the tax on value added in the six Common Market-countries. These directives were published in the official gazette of the European Communities on April 14th, 1967.

The first directive fixes January 1st, 1970, as the final date by which each member country will be required to implement this tax. It also defines the principle of the system: that at each transaction the tax is calculated on the price of the goods or services but is only actually paid after deduction of the amount of T.V.A. which had been directly levied on the various components of the price. In principle the system should apply down to the sale of the product in the retail trade, but until the tax frontiers can be abolished as a result of the approximation of rates (i.e. until compensatory levies on imports and drawbacks on exports are abolished), the member countries will only have to apply the system down to the wholesale stage. Hence, for the time being they are free not to extend the system to the retail trade, but if they wish they can provide for a special tax on the retail trade or even at the stage prior to it.

The second directive lays down in greater detail the principles which member States must observe when drawing up their own rules for applying T.V.A. However, as long as tax frontiers have not been abolished, that is to say in fact, as long as the T.V.A. rate is not the same throughout the Community, the member States will retain a certain freedom. For instance, they can have different lists of products which are tax-free or taxed at a reduced rate. They may also, after consulting the Commission and the other member States, refuse to deduct taxes which have been levied on certain investments, or they may provide for such taxes to be deducted not immediately but over a certain number of years.

The Commission is now preparing a third directive to lay down the rules under which T.V.A. can be applied to farm products. This, of course, raises very ticklish questions. Account has to be taken of the existence of many small farms to which a relatively complicated system can hardly be applied. However, in the nature of the case farmers and agricultural products must also be allowed to benefit from the advantages of T.V.A. and particularly from the opportunity of recouping the tax levied on their purchases and their investments.

This has given us the idea of allowing farmers to opt for T.V.A. or to refuse it and remain subject to a different system. But even here we are endeavouring to provide for those farmers who do not opt for T.V.A., a standard system which would enable them to deduct at least a part of the T.V.A. charged on their investments. The question of T.V.A. and agriculture is difficult to settle because it not only brings up problems of equality of treatment for taxation purposes, but it is also closely connected with agricultural policy.

Lastly, the Commission will have to submit a fourth directive to the Council, in principle before January 1st, 1969, providing some information about the way in which tax frontiers can be abolished and the date, that is, the date on which sales from one member country to another will no longer be considered as exports but will be taxed virtually as though they were sales on the domestic market.

Application of T.V.A.

What, then, are the prospects for practical application of the first directives of the Council of Ministers?

Germany has just introduced a system of T.V.A. with effect from January 1st, 1968. It is to be applied down to the retail stage at a rate of 10 per cent, which is due to rise to 11 per cent on July 1st, 1968. Taxes levied on investments will be immediately deductible in full, but in order to mitigate the budgetary repercussions of this measure, for a transitional period a degressive tax will be levied on the investments to compensate this.

France, which already has T.V.A., has extended its system down to the retail stage, also from January 1st, 1968, but at the rate of $16\frac{2}{3}$ per cent instead of 20 per cent as at present. However, this rate of $16\frac{2}{3}$ per cent cannot be compared with the rate envisaged by the other countries, since until now the tax has been calculated in France on the price after tax, and not on the net price before tax as in the other countries. We must therefore give the figure of 20 per cent before tax) for France.

The Netherlands is planning to introduce T.V.A. at 12 per cent, beginning on January 1st, 1969, and here again it will be applied down to retail trading.

In Italy, a T.V.A. of 10 per cent has been planned but it goes no further than the wholesale trade stage, retail trade being subject to a special tax.

In Belgium and Luxembourg, schemes are also being studied but have not yet emerged from the Ministries.

In any case, it is now fairly certain that on January 1st, 1970, added value taxes planned in accordance with common principles and having the same structures will be in force in the six countries of the community.

Excise duties

Parallel with the studies on the conversion of general turnover taxes into taxes on value added, work is going on and proposals are being prepared with regard to certain important excise duties on tobacco, beer, spirits, sugar and petroleum products.

Work is most advanced on tobacco, for which draft regulations were submitted to the Council just before last summer. Action is mainly concerned with:

- (i) laying down a common agricultural policy and organizing the market for unmanufactured tobacco;
- (ii) achieving harmonization of taxes (other than turnover taxes) on the consumption of manufactured tobacco and excise duties on manufactured tobacco;
- (iii) adjusting the national monopolies, which means essentially the tobacco trading systems in France and Italy.

The principle is to establish a pattern for excise duties on manufactured tobaccos which is harmonized and neutral from the point of view of competition. Tobacco is taxed very differently in the various countries (proportionate tax, specific tax, etc). This diversity greatly hampers the interpenetration of markets and healthy competition between domestic products and those imported from other member States or even from non-member countries. By and large the system proposed by the Commission is to levy, on cigarettes for example, a minimum excise duty up to a certain retail price; then a proportionate tax, and finally, beginning at a higher price level, a degressive tax.

At the same time, France and Italy would have to adjust their tobacco monopolies by January 1st, 1970, by limiting them to the manufacturers of tobaccos and cigarettes to the exclusion of marketing.

As I have said, studies on the approximation of taxes on other consumer goods, such as beer, are also under way but no precise proposals have yet been made concerning them.

DIRECT TAXES

Last year was also an important milestone in the field of direct taxes; for it was in 1967 that the Commission made its first official proposals to the Council. These proposals were not couched in the specific form of a directive as in the case of turnover taxes, but were embodied in a memorandum on a tax harmonization programme which was submitted to the Council on June 27th, last. The complete text was published as a supplement to Bulletin 8–1967 of the European Economic Community.

The Council of Ministers instructed the Committee of Permanent Representatives, i.e. the ambassadors of the six countries in the Common Market, to report on this memorandum before the end of 1967 so that the subject might be discussed early in 1968. We are therefore now waiting to see what reception the Council will give to this programme for direct taxes and what its further suggestions will be.

What does this programme contain? The first part consists of a recapitulation of the reasons why a gradual approximation of the tax systems of the six countries is necessary. It gives the outline of what a harmonized fiscal situation in the Common Market could be in the long run. It may be imagined that eventually the budget revenue of the member States will come from:

- (i) A tax on value added largely harmonized throughout the six countries;
- (ii) A corporation tax, and in a more general way fiscal charges weighing directly on companies, also under a system which would be very similar in all the countries;
- (iii) Personal income tax which, in contrast to the two others, might still diverge fairly widely from one member country to another for a long time yet.

But the memorandum deals principally with three questions which the present development of the Common Market makes immediately topical. These are: (1) structural adaptations and combinations of firms; (2) investment and production costs; and (3) capital movements. In these three fields the Commission suggests measures to be taken in the near future.

Structural adaptation and industrial combination

There is no need for me to stress this question with which you are all familiar; firms must be allowed to reorganize and to form groupings solidly established in more than one Community country, in order to improve the competitive nature of European production. At the present time, however, certain tax provisions are obstacles to this type of operation.

International combining operations can assume various forms, but are especially of two types:

- (a) the first type consists of mergers of companies, i.e. the substitution for several previously existing companies of one company, a single legal entity;
- (b) the second type consists of creating close links between companies in different countries, particularly by creating parent and subsidiary companies and holding companies.

In operations of the merger type (a) the problem is how to find an acceptable tax system applicable to appreciations of assets which appear at the time of merger and which have not yet been taxed. This problem has more or less been settled for mergers of companies within a single country, but it still has to be solved for mergers between two firms in different countries. In this connection the Commission proposes a uniform solution for all mergers which might take place between companies in different member States. Part of the additional assets in question would be provisionally exempted and the balance taxed at a very low rate or at a normal rate but with long periods allowed for

For operations of the participation type (b) the important thing is to improve the position of parent and subsidiary companies, especially when the two companies are not in the same member country. The parent company must be guaranteed exemption from tax for profits received from the subsidiary in the form of dividends. Care must also be taken that any system for withholding tax at source on dividends distributed by the subsidiary to the parent company does not lead to double taxation, or again, does not penalize certain groups in relation to others.

You will be familiar with these types of problems, which so far have been discussed more or less bilaterally. We are now looking for solutions valid for all the member countries and more completely applicable in a multilateral framework.

Investment and production costs

In this field we are obviously trying gradually to approximate the basic concepts of the most important components of tax assessment – depreciation, stocks, appreciation, etc. However, the problem which is engaging our particular attention is encouragement of investment. We ask that taxation as an instrument for influencing the economy – an instrument to which we have absolutely no objection – should nevertheless be handled in the context of an overall policy. In the near future measures to stimulate investment are to be discussed under a Community procedure for consultation and co-ordination in the framework of a shortor medium-term economic policy. I will not enlarge on these matters the importance of which is completely familiar to you.

Capital movements

Capital movements between the member States are becoming increasingly free. There is practically no longer any exchange control, and investments by private persons and the direct investments of firms are to all intents and purposes free between Common Market countries. The facilities for calling on public savings and for floating loans in another member country will become greater in the future.

The development of capital movements between member States and the expansion of the money markets are linked with the problems of financing enterprises. Reduction of the profit margins of enterprises causes them to make greater calls on the capital market to finance their investments. At the same time, the development of public investments also obliges administrations to have increasing recourse to capital markets.

We must therefore make the best use of all possible resources, avoid fencing of individual financial markets, and simplify and harmonize the collection of savings and their redistribution to users. At present we note that the various possible sources of financing are cut off from each other, both in the individual countries and at Community level. This is one reason for the differences between industries and between countries in the costs of credit and the return on savings. But these differences also stem from the monetary, budgetary and fiscal policies of the different States

In fact, the procedures for taxing income from transferable securities (bonds, shares) vary greatly from one country to the other. In this way they bring about appre-

People listen to you . . . on all sorts of topics, by no means the least of these being investment and savings. If you feel that your client or customer needs a high yield, utmost security yet good liquidity, isn't a building society the place for his money? These are just three of seven big advantages of putting money in a building society. All seven are important, and possibly the most important thing about them is that they can only be found together in a building society.

ONLY BUILDING SOCIETIES GIVE YOU THE 'BIG SEVEN' BENEFITS

- 1 Interest on a range of savings schemes is equivalent to well over 7% for the standard rate taxpayer because . . .
- 2 ... income tax is paid by the Building Society.
- 3 Utmost security; the money goes into the most solid of all investments: owner-occupied property.
- 4 Freedom from market fluctuations.
- 5 Easy withdrawals at short notice.
- 6 No charges, no expenses.
- 7 Over-the-counter service: swift, efficient and friendly.

ciable differences in yields for savers and, as a result, artificial differences in costs of financing for firms and public authorities.

The procedures and rates of withholding tax at source on dividends and interest are of special importance, since they directly influence the yield on investments. These deductions at source do, in fact, often have the character of a real and definitive tax. This is the case:

- (i) if international double taxation is not avoided;
- (ii) if the holder of the securities refrains from invoking a convention on double taxation because the formalities involved are too complex (a frequent occurence, according to an inquiry among bankers);
- (iii) if the holder does not ask to be credited with the amount withheld and does not declare the income concerned for personal income tax purposes;
- (iv) if the holder (an individual or corporate body) is exempt from tax and cannot obtain reimbursement of the amount withheld.

The problem is particularly important in the case of fixed-yield capital (i.e. mainly bonds). With these securities it is the yield which primarily interests the subscriber; however, most subscribers consider only the net yield, i.e. after tax withheld at source. Moreover these investors are becoming more and more free to choose the place where they make their investments and many of them, whether resident in the Community or not, can run the risk of not declaring this income for personal income tax.

Equality of treatment

With the object of ensuring equality of treatment for the taxpayer, it therefore becomes logical to propose harmonization of tax withheld at source on interest on bonds but at a moderate rate in view of the facilities which certain non-member countries can offer and of the resultant danger of economic assets leaving the community. The Commission therefore proposed a tax of 10 per cent on the interest on all borrowings by debtors residing in the Community.

For dividends the problem is the same, though less acute; yield is not the only element which influences share subscribers. Similar considerations have, however, led the Commission to propose a uniform withholding tax of 25 per cent on the dividends of companies in the community.

Naturally, it should be possible for the 10 or 25 per cent withheld to be automatically deductible from the personal income tax for which the beneficiary, whether an individual or a corporation, would be liable, or where appropriate, it should be reimbursable with a minimum of formality.

It can, of course, be argued that other fiscal factors obviously influence the yield from shares. The various taxes falling on firms, whether or not deductible when calculating taxable profit and corporation tax, undoubtedly reduce the shareholder's final income, but he feels the influence of these less directly. He often tends to look only at the dividend paid out and to examine only the tax arrangements subsequently applied to this individual dividend. Hence, when the investor makes comparisons of yield, he often fails to take into account the charge represented by corporation tax. It would therefore seem possible to dissociate the study of the problems concerning the tax burden on companies from the problems of the general harmonization of withholding tax at source. The Commission does not intend to neglect this matter but will deal with it later.

Economic double taxation

There is, however, a problem which is already causing us concern. This is the problem of the 'economic double taxation' of dividends which are in principle taxed twice, both in the Common Market countries and now also in Great Britain – once in the form of company profits and again as dividends, as items of income in the shareholder's total income.

I would not wish to extend this already lengthy exposition by a doctrinal discussion. However, I do believe that we should speak much more of an excessive overall burden than of double taxation and that the problem is more one of easing the total burden than of abolishing the principle of two successive charges. But the discussions of doctrine in the Community are still proceeding, and I will merely say a few words on how matters stand at present.

The problem is one of the co-existence in the Common Market between:

- (i) countries where there is no relief from double taxation, i.e. the Netherlands and Luxembourg;
- (ii) countries where double taxation is mitigated by a tax credit for the shareholders, i.e. France and Belgium (though in both these countries the credit concerns only dividends of French or Belgian companies paid to residents in France or Belgium; thus residents have no benefit from it in respect of their dividends from other member countries or from non-member countries, and non-residents have no benefit at all – there is therefore some discrimination);
- (iii) countries where it is mitigated by a reduction of the corporation tax on that portion of profits which is distributed, i.e. Germany.

This situation gives rise to inequalities and distortions according to the pattern or channels of investment. These distortions are becoming less and less tolerable in view of the present prospects of expanding financial relations between member States, and it is not sufficient to try to suppress them by bilateral arrangements between these States. We must look for an overall solution and eventually it will probably be necessary either:

- (a) to introduce a single system to mitigate this notorious double taxation by:
 - (i) adopting two rates, as in Germany, which would be identical in all member countries; or
 - (ii) a system of tax credit, as in France or Belgium, but applied to all dividends arising in the Community and not only to dividends arising in the member country concerned.

(This system would be more flexible since it would enable each country to vary the credit according to the level of personal income tax which it desired to maintain), or

(b) to abandon such systems which are bound to be complicated and, for example, to accept economic double taxation but reduce the rate of corporation tax irrespective of the way profits are allocated.

For the time being the Commission has confined itself in its memorandum to asking France and Belgium to review their systems in more of a Community spirit.

Reviews

The Management of Data Processing

by RICHARD G. CANNING and ROGER L. SISSON John Wiley & Sons Ltd, London. 56s.

The title of this book may well suggest to the reader that it deals with a static position, i.e. that of the management of an established department within the business. This is far from the case, the whole weight of the book highlighting the rapidly changing scene as far as the use of computers is concerned. While we may be aware of the impact that computers are having and will continue to have on our lives, it is doubtful whether many people have compared the rapidity of the introduction of computers and the startling changes they are causing, with the effects of other major technological changes. As the authors point out ... progress (in the computer field) is comparable to going from the Model T Ford to supersonic jet transport in ten years' time'. Again, computers are generally regarded as costly, but '... if the cost of automobiles had decreased proportionately in the same length of time and we had trouble in finding a parking space while going to a baseball game we would not bother - we would just "throw the car away" and buy another one after the game'.

In the view of the authors, the impact of E.D.P. on organizations is only in its infancy and they provide a wide ranging survey of advanced applications where significant further advances will occur, and other areas where computer technology may have a significant impact in the near future. Such ideas as the common corporate data file and the carrying out of transactions between concerns through the medium of computers 'talking' to each other, may well become fact in a short space of time; such steps, allied with the increasing use of computers in the decision-making process, will transform the place of E.D.P. in many organizations.

All this change will have an increasing effect on the place of the E.D.P. team within the organizational structure, and the authors argue that information processing may become one of the major functional areas in the firm. A proper appreciation of future trends in both hardware and software is necessary in the planning of future applications if the organization is to make sense in the environment within which it will operate in the future. To meet this challenge, management must have a policy for directing the efforts of the E.D.P. team and staffing it with employees of the right calibre if it is to succeed.

Altogether this is an admirable survey of future trends in E.D.P. and the effect that those trends will have upon the management and organization of the data processing function, and will make interesting reading for those at all levels who are concerned with the use of computers.

Accounting for Management

by Walter L. Burke and E. Bryan Smyth

The Law Book Company Ltd, Sydney. $11; Sweet & Maxwell Ltd, London. 110s.

The high quality of many of the Australian accounting textbooks which find a place on United Kingdom bookshelves is convincing evidence of the vigorous developments within the profession 'down under' during the past decade.

This volume is a valuable addition to that ever-growing list and by any standards it can be regarded as a classic of its kind. Its approach, which should appeal to the qualified accountant and the business school graduate alike, is as up to the minute as any textbook on this subject can be. Concerning itself less with the mechanics of accountancy than with the meaning and significance of the information which is its end-product, it manages to achieve an all too rare blend between the essential theoretical background and the practicalities of everyday life.

Although many of the subject headings have a familiar ring – budgeting, standard costing, profit planning, capital budgeting, computers and special decisions – the authors have imparted a refreshingly lucid approach which has its own appeal for this reviewer. The chapter on mathematical techniques and related subjects is probably a pointer towards the new pattern of accountancy textbooks in the future and this volume is worthy of a place on the bookshelf of every accountant who prides himself on familiarity with the new thinking that is pervading the profession.

Account Rendered

Selected poems by Charles Lister The Mitre Press, London. 10s 6d.

Few accountants are to be found on the foothills of Olympus but one who has arrived there by way of the West Riding, Torquay, Swindon and Newcastle-under-Lyme is Charles Lister, Borough Treasurer of the latter town and a member of the English Institute. His passport to Parnassus (another haunt of the Muses) is a book of short poems, each exquisitely polished, in which he reflects on the hidden depths and inner meanings of a number of commonplace things. The calm and tranquil surface of a pool conceals 'a subtle virus of destruction'. The lights and laughter of a fairground is a stabbing reminder of the transcience of human life. His inward eye sees an old woman as a witch about to fly away astride the sticks she is gathering in the twilight. Rooftop aerials become ghosts in the sky and the radio telescope at Jodrell Bank suggests a begging bowl—

'Upturned for the receipt of alms From an incredulous heaven'.

A feeling of wonderment at the apparent prodigality of nature runs through his verses. He sees an invasion of city starlings as 'a lifting wheeling cloud of life' and wind-caught autumnal leaves as 'a singing partnership of earth and sky'. Always completely original, he is in the tradition of Matthew Arnold who wrote poetry to sustain and console his readers if not to elucidate for them the deeper mysteries of life.

Although diverse in theme, Charles Lister's work is of a uniform technical excellence which makes it difficult to trace the development of his muse. It would have been helpful, therefore, if the individual poems had been dated. A. E. Housman, another poet whom he at times resembles, once admitted that he could no more define postry than a terrier could define a rat but that true poetry could be recognized by the symptoms it provoked in the reader. Charles Lister's poems are thus likely to strike a responsive chord in the perceptory senses of many discriminating readers.

Is Your Auditor Really Necessary?

by J. P. LANDAU, F.A.C.C.A.

President, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants

THE auditor has acquired a reputation, whether he likes it or not, of being a financial superman, a brave champion of shareholders, directors, investors and public, against the monolithic power of the vast corporation or as interpreter of the magic rites and formulae contained in accounts. The invidious and potentially dangerous position in which he finds himself thus placed means that the peculiar love/hate relationship subsisting between the statutory auditor and his client can turn quite violently against him, for the mystique is founded upon the premise that experts are not human and therefore do not err.

Concurrent, however, with the deus ex machina regard in which the professional auditor is held, there is a strong undercurrent of doubt of the relevance of the auditor to current business needs. His importance as ax adviser, accountant and financial adviser is readily appreciated within the business community, but the audit services are becoming of secondary importance both to the professional accountant and his clients. It is timely to examine the causes of this ambivalent attitude together with the nature of the criticisms. If I may answer my original question at the outset—if the auditor is not really necessary, then he outset

The professional auditor means all things to all men. To the small businessman he is an accountant who produces a meaningless statement of affairs from a meaningless pile of paper, but who none the less saves him tax. To the medium-sized company he is the guarantor that no fraud or errors have been committed, and who also saves it tax. To the large company he is the statutory nuisance, duplicating the work of the internal audit staff and charging an exorbitant fee for doing it. The auditor sees himself in all these guises together with a few others, such as window-dresser, tightrope-walker and whipping-boy. There is no solution to these difficulties whilst the auditor is attempting to wear all these hats, some of them simultaneously.

The duties of the external auditor have been promulgated by statute, but the methods by which he fulfils these duties are, of necessity, left to the individual. This means that within the profession there is a substantial area of difference – ranging from the depth checks, internal control questionnaires and other rational audit procedures of the more radical firms, to the audits carried out by methods related to expediency, cost effectiveness and personal relationships.

Of course, the stringent codes laid down by the various professional bodies impose a strong disciplinary and moral force upon their members, but since in the final resort the decisions rest in the hands of the individual, the methods of fulfilling his statutory duties must be under constant scrutiny by the accountancy bodies and by the members in order that auditing techniques are up to date and relevant to the exigencies of the computer age.

To be more particular, the auditor should give as close a scrutiny of the stock and internal control systems as he is giving at present to the bank reconciliation and petty cash count. He should also make fuller use of the powers of qualifying his audit report, the signing of which has become a mere formality in far too many cases.

Although every auditor is conversant with his watchdog responsibilities, it is often evident that the business community sees him as a bloodhound. When a fraud or error comes to light subsequent to an audit, the bitter comment is usually 'What was the auditor doing?' – a complaint which will not be ameliorated by a misquotation of Lord Justice Lopes's dicta, or reminders of the efficacy of internal control.

An auditor may not be a detective, but the responsibilities vested in him are such that he must carry out his investigations not as a reasonable man, but as a reasonable auditor. Although he should not approach his client's

An a dress viven last week at a luncheon meeting of the London Chapter of the Institute of Internal Auditors.

246 ACCOUNTANT February 24th, 1968

staff as prospective thieves and perpetrators of fraud, he should nevertheless bear in mind the possibility that they

Where there are obvious gaps in the accounting system or records so as to render it impossible for the auditor to discover fraud or theft without employing third-degree or orture chamber methods, it is absolutely necessary for him formally to advise the client of the deficiencies and, if necessary, to qualify his audit report. This is not merely to protect his own position but to warn and assist the client, and to place the responsibility precisely where it belongs.

If the auditor has made no attempt to erase the guise of medicine man and witch-doctor with which he has been vested, he has no cause for complaint if it rebounds upon him. To return to my previous remarks, however, he must ensure that his audit is rather more than perfunctory before deciding where the responsibility for the discovery of fraud and error lies.

The plumber, the doctor and the cloakroom attendant all owe their existence to the fact that there is a need for them and that they provide a service to satisfy that need; or to express it in another fashion, it is the old law of supply and demand. The professional auditor, however, owes his existence to the fact that the law has decreed that a limited company must prepare accounts and those accounts must be audited by a recognized qualified accountant.

Is an auditor really necessary and does he provide a service requisite to the needs? I would not be addressing you now if I or you considered the answer to be in the negative. However, it is not a flippant question and deserves close consideration. It is a criticism voiced at many levels and in various forms and must be faced as fairly and squarely as it is answered, for the law of supply and demand is an evolutionary process, and to follow the Darwinian theory through to its natural conclusion it would mean that a comparatively recent species would become rapidly extinct if society decreed that the auditor had outlived his usefulness. It will be necessary to consider this question from several viewpoints because of the variety of services an auditor is required to perform.

Efficient control

The large public company controlled by a large executive body operating a wide administrative network and employing a vast capital subscribed from public or private funds is a distinct entity of its own. In order to have reached and to maintain its position of eminence, it has doubtless long had in operation a system of efficient control and administration. Within its hierarchy, the internal control system and internal audit section have reached a highly-developed stage, and consequently the possibility of fraud and error of any magnitude being undetected is extremely unlikely.

Integrated with the internal control system, effective budgetary control and management accounting departments ensure that accounts are prepared accurately and speedily, and that an accurate forecast of the current year's trading is available before the financial year ends. The reductio ad absurdum is that the professional auditor arrives to audit a system and records which have already been audited, and to certify accounts which have already been prepared and will probably be published without alteration.

Even the fact that he is carrying out his audit in the interests of the shareholders seems somewhat absurd when one considers the number of shareholders who deign to attend an annual general meeting. It is no wonder that the management and board of such a company tend to regard the professional auditor as a somewhat benign irritation, as they see him duplicating the internal auditor's work, and have to wait for his seal of approval before they can publish the accounts which have been prepared some time before.

It is necessary to state the obvious that the statutory auditor owes his position to the safeguard he constitutes against the concentration of power which, however diversified in the chain of command, is nevertheless in the hands of a few dictators; for however benevolent the despots may be, it should be remembered that the corrupting influences of power are not isolated to political spheres. The internal audit department, however efficient and dedicated, owes its allegiance and very existence to the company and its controllers, so that the external auditor's responsibilities can by no means be delegated. At the same time he will obviously render himself superfluous in the eyes of management if he approaches his audit ignoring the existence of a highly-skilled and experienced internal audit department.

Close liaison

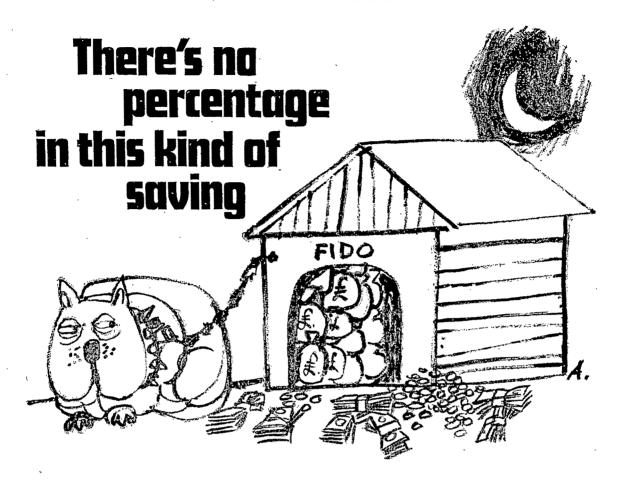

The scope of his audit checks will be drastically affected by the nature and extent of the work performed by the internal auditors. A cross fertilization of ideas and methods will be of the greatest mutual benefit, and a close liaison between the external and internal audit teams will be of great benefit to the company. The external auditor must be prepared to sacrifice some of his traditional trade secrets in order to achieve a close co-ordination. Thus, for example, it may be agreed that where it is accepted that postings to the nominal ledger must be checked, they will be checked by each set of auditors in alternate months; alternatively one member from each team could work together in performing this and other routine tasks.

Audit working papers and audit programmes can be compiled in consultation with each other. With goodwill on both sides and a joint appreciation of each other's problems, the statutory audit may be performed with very little duplication of work and effort and at the same time be of considerable benefit to the company's internal control

It must be emphasized, however, that the external auditor has a statutory responsibility to fulfil and he must be able to satisfy himself that the books and records show a true and fair view, notwithstanding the existence of an internal audit department.

Another irritation to management is the time lag that often occurs between the preparation of the annual accounts and the subsequent signing of the audit report and consequent publication. A disadvantage of historical accounting is that all too quickly it can become ancient history. There is much that can be done to speed up the course of an audit. Much of it devolves upon simple administration, such as having the right number and quality of staff available at the right time - a simple piece of administration which is all too often lacking in many public accountants' offices.

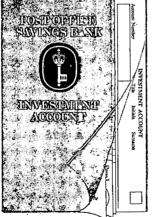

A client has a justifiable cause for complaint in the constant switching of staff which causes a lack of continuity and efficiency. Other administrative details such as preprinting of draft accounts and the preparation of proforma working papers should be self-evident, but obviously the most important time-saver in the audit of a large public company is the planning and maintenance of an efficient

Facts for MANAGEMENT

The FACTUAL SERIES gives you information for making comparative INVESTMENT APPRAISALS and for judging SHARE-PRICE EVALUATIONS.

YOU CAN HAVE THE CONCENTRATED FACTS ON INVESTMENT AT YOUR FINGERTIPS

The first 3 in this series provide facts on some 600 quoted British Industrial Companies, classified into 96 industries:—

- 1. Rates of Profit in British Industry. The average rate of profit, as a percentage, is given for each industry for the periods 1955-60 and 1960-65 and for each company for 1960-65; this is derived from stock-market valuations, and is adjusted to allow for Corporation Tax.
- 2. Growth of Profits in British Industry. The average rate of growth, as per cent per annum, is given for each industry for the periods 1955-60 and 1960-65, and also for each of 661 companies ranked within main size groups by the growth rate for a basic 10-year period.
- Risk Factors in British Industry. An estimated 'risk factor' is given for each industry; this can be used as a 'weighting' factor where it is necessary to allow for risk in making future investment appraisals. Also shown are estimates of the correctness of past valuations by the stock-market.

Number 4 in this series, Giants in British Industry, shows more detail on the 26 commercial Giants in British industry, and provides a comparison with the 14 nationalised industries.

system of continuous audit, so that procedural and systemschecking and visits to branches can be substantially completed before the year-end. This will also ensure that any major errors are thoroughly investigated and corrected before the books are closed.

It is at the next level of companies – the medium-sized public or privately-owned company – that the auditor is most often criticized for his irrelevance and yet where his responsibilities and duties are more onerous, and where his services can often be more beneficial to the management. This type of company will often have an efficiently run accounting department and a simple costing and management accounting system; but by reason of its size the system of internal control will be limited since the financial affairs of the company will often be under the direct control of one person.

Misconception of auditor's duties

This employee – be he designated chief accountant, secretary or financial director – is very busily employed and the annual arrival of the auditor is of some irritation, since he will be taking up valuable time and space and working on books that are in constant use. At the best these audits are conducted with amicable hostility, at worst with downright enmity. In the view of the client, the auditor only justifies his existence in saving work for the accountant by the preparation of the final accounts and by the discovery of frauds or errors.

It is this misconception of the external auditor's duties which is of inherent danger. When an undiscovered error or fraud comes to light, the liability is laid at the auditor's door, however diligently the audit has been conducted. It is accordingly very important for the auditor to ascertain at the commencement of a new audit, that it is appreciated how far the auditor's responsibility extends; if the client requires a particularly detailed check of certain sections of the accounting system, then it is in the interests of both parties to have this formally confirmed in writing. It is similarly necessary to communicate formally any weaknesses or deficiencies in the system which place certain sections thereof at risk.

To diverge slightly, it is particularly important for a thorough systems-audit to be made in the audit of the medium-sized company for, despite the fact that the internal control system may appear to be generally efficient, it is likely that beneficial improvements can be made, always bearing in mind the need to be practical at all times. For example, even though it may be impractical or uneconomical to employ extra staff, the directors – who are often very sales-orientated – should be encouraged to take an active interest in the administrative side of the business so that a system of expenditure authorization can be instituted.

The external auditor has much to learn from the internal auditor in the matter of systems auditing. It is surprising what little advance had been made in this technique; the methods of auditing are still practised very much at prewar levels and are just not sufficient to meet current needs. The auditing profession must take drastic steps to reeducate itself in order to apply the most advanced auditing standards to cope with current conditions.

The computer as an aid to business is found at present only in the larger commercial and industrial undertakings, but within the next decade the computer manufacturer will doubtless have gained sufficient experience in the installation and employment of computerized systems to be able to provide computers requisite to the needs and within the grasp of the smaller concern. Consequently problems raised in the audit of fully-computerized systems, at present facing only the larger professional firms, will soon be the concern of the profession as a whole. In order to meet these problems it will be necessary for an agonizing reappraisal to be made of auditing methods, and a gradual change now from the traditional procedural checking to systems and depth checking will make this radical re-orientation considerably more painless.

The audit of the small company and the family business forms the major part of the work in the smaller partnerships and yet the difficulties raised are normally out of all proportion to their size. Faced with incomplete or inadequate records and information, considerable skill and painstaking detail is often required to be able to piece together the fragments and formulate a set of accounts therefrom. Yet if the client is a limited company, an audit report is required in exactly the same way and in similar terms to one required for a company the size of I.C.I.

It is often very di.ficult to determine where the duties and work of the accountant end, and those of the auditor begin. It would appear that many auditors are applying a completely different set of standards in the audit of these small companies and the audit report becomes a mere formality in many such cases. As a general rule, the writing up of the books and the audit thereof should not be carried out by the same firm of accountants. The exchange of an auditor's report for an audit fee in the same fashion as the purchase of goods from a supermarket is doing the profession considerable harm. The importance of giving a 'clean' report only when the company's accounts have come up to the required standard cannot be overemphasized. It should be forcefully pointed out that companies have certain statutory obligations with regard to the keeping of accounts just as much as the auditor has in checking them.

Need for accountant's skills

Undoubtedly at all levels of business there is a need for the highly-specialized and skilled services provided by the practising accountant. The rapid changes in company and tax law means that the need is never more self-evident than to-day. In order to preserve the high standards which are required from the auditing profession, it may well be necessary for the merging of the smaller firms so that a more comprehensive service can be provided.

Great care must be exercized over the engagement of new staff; terms of employment must be made more attractive so that high-calibre recruits, such as university and technical college graduates, find their way into the profession. The training of new entrants must be fully comprehensive and might well include, at some future stage, university attendance either on a sandwich-course basis or for a fixed period during training.

Just as necessary as safeguarding the future of the profession it is equally important that auditors should keep themselves in the vanguard in the present by a constant reappraisal of their methods and aims. Accountants have gained a reputation for accuracy, trustworthiness and honesty, and it would be a tragedy if this reputation were squandered by other attributes of expediency, conservatism and 'book-cooking' which have also been slightingly applied to the profession.

Lindustries

N presenting the group's accounts for the year to last September, the directors of Lindustries Ltd decided to anticipate the requirements of the Companies Act 1967. This leads the chairman, Mr W. E. Luke, to comment that, since the directors' report giving a clinical analysis of the company's activities during the year now replaces the chairman's statement, he is saved 'much time and thought'. Even so, he is 'encouraged to add a few personal observations' allow company chairmen to get away from detail in their statements and to concentrate on comment on the future course of the group and on the development of group structure. What is more, since, despite acceleration in accounting procedure, company accounts are presented well into the 'current year', the chairman ought to be able to give a reasonable indication of current progress.

For first-quarter results to be issued simultaneously with the previous year's full accounts may be something to aim at by those companies where accounting intricacies tend to delay presentation of annual accounts. The 1967-68 financial year of Lindustries was just a quarter old when the directors' report was signed on January 8th. Shareholders received the accounts on February 1st.

Divisional basis

Lindustries was at one time virtually a 100 per cent textile company – the old name having been The Linen Thread Co Ltd. The present name was taken in April 1961 and now Lindustries is a holding company with its business managed on a divisional basis – textile, engineering and overseas. The group profit and loss account, it will be seen, is presented on this divisional basis for both turnover and profits.

In 'Highlights' (for reasons of space, not included in the reprint) figures show that of £14,345,000 of net capital employed in the group, £5,837,000 at the financial year end was employed in the textile division with the profit of £413,000 representing a return of 7·1 per cent. In the engineering division the investment of £5,878,000 brought profit of £1,164,000, a return of 19·8 per cent, and the overseas division's profit of £450,000 represented a return of 17·1 per cent on an investment of £2,630,000 employed. Over the group as a whole, profits of £2,027,000 meant a return of 14·1 per cent on employed capital of £14,345,000.

Dividend at $10\frac{3}{4}d$ a share was paid from earnings of 1s 4d a share. For 1965-66 a payment of $9\frac{1}{2}d$ a share was made from earnings of 1s $9\frac{1}{2}d$.

In the 1965-66 financial year, profits of £1,587,000 meant a return of 11.5 per cent on employed assets of £13,850,000. All round, therefore, the year under review was one of development and expansion despite the shading of profits in the textile division.

Third interest

One of the 'personal observations' made by the chairman – and it is probably not entirely personal – concerns Lindustries' thinking in terms of expansion and, in particular, of adding a third home diversification to the group. Liquid funds stand at about £1,500,000 and the board is 'actively endeavouring to find a third diversification'. Two or three possible acquisitions are being considered.

The search, Mr Luke admits, is not easy. He points out that if a company has good management and is making good profits, a sizeable goodwill figure is generally sought by the vendor. The investment, however, has every chance from the outset of providing a satisfactory profit in relation to capital invested.

On the other hand, if the company lacks sound management and is perhaps in loss, it can be bought at a discount, but it could take a year or two for the investment to be serviced and this could adversely affect the group short-term profit record. 'I think', Mr Luke says, 'we can now claim to have the kind of management which could improve the profitability (perhaps reducing the capital employed) in an ailing company with long-term benefits to shareholders which would outweigh any temporary standstill in profits.' But the directors are 'quite sure that the acquisition of small companies (other than on a vertical or horizontal expansion of existing companies) is undesirable'. The aim is to find a sizeable third interest to broaden the group earnings basis 'and this could mean an investment of around £3,000,000'.

Devaluation

The book value of Lindustries' overseas assets has increased by over £500,000 as a result of devaluation, and Mr

Luke says that it will be 'very unfortunate for the company, and indeed for the country, if the Government's present restrictions on overseas investment are continued a day longer than is absolutely necessary'.

Looking at the current year he says that although there may be some 'diminution' in profits by one subsidiary in the engineering divisions as a result of the Government's policy in the aircraft industry, increased profits in the textile division, consequent upon devaluation and the beneficial results of current reorganization should compensate. In the engineering division profits may suffer if the extra cost of imported raw materials cannot be passed on to customers. There should be exchange benefit on the textile division's exports and on overseas subsidiaries' profits, and 'on balance, prospects for the current year are favourable'.

Concerning the 'results of current reorganization', Mr Luke points out that concentration of manufacturing facilities, reductions in inventories and 'cutting down dead wood' have combined to reduce capital employed in three of the textile subsidiaries by a total of over £600,000.

CITY NOTES

T becomes increasingly difficult to remain deferentially agog', says a prominent firm of London stockbrokers in a current stock-market review. The market has been waiting ever since November 18th for the planning that was supposed to have been ready at the time of planned devaluation. It is not entirely certain that even the Budget on March 19th will be the final stage in the planning process.

'Equity investment', the stockbrokers comment, 'is widely regarded as a means of salvaging something from the wreck of dynamic leadership'. It is certainly true that investors who have followed equities since 1964, on the grounds that the Government, through doing too little too late, has failed to cope with economic problems, have been proved correct in their policy.

It is natural therefore that they should follow the same policy when the Government presents devaluation as 'planned' in mid-November and is still apparently planning four months later. The general tone of the market looks less vulnerable to the effects of official policy than do the fortunes of individual companies.

More and more, individual investors prefer to 'buy the market' through unit trusts rather than buy specific shares which may or may not prove successful. That is one of the reasons for the unit trust boom.

N January unit trusts attracted a record £16.08 million of net new investment money. A particular development during the month was the launching of the Trustee Savings Bank's Unit Trust which pulled in £5 million in its first week. The previous record intake month was February 1966 when the figure was £14.43 million. Total unit trust funds at the end of last month reached a new peak of £906.44 million and the number of unit holders' accounts reached a record 1,752,000 indicating that, allowing for duplication, there are now well over a million people investing in the unit trust industry.

ANK annual meetings this year were expected, in some quarters, to find shareholders hostile about 'non-disclosure' of true banking profits and reserves with reference to the terms of banking mergers, and in particular the Barclays-Lloyds-Martins merger which has gone to the Monopolies Commission. Martins' shareholders, in particular, were urged to press the board for information. But shareholders seemed satisfied at the statement that a merger price for Martins' shares would be at least 30s and far from pressing the board for information, they appeared to be struck dumb. Barclays' and Lloyds' shareholders seemed content and the only voice raised in any kind of protest was heard belatedly complaining about the National Provincial-Westminster merger which has received the sanction of the Bank of England and the Government.

NDUSTRIAL moods and trends always throw up new jargon. 'Fragmentation' is the word now being used with reference to the run of take-over operations in the textile industry. The industry is 'fragmented' and mergers are designed to deal with this 'fragmentation' problem.

The Courtaulds company has – if the word is allowed – 'de-fragmented' the textile industry to the extent of about a couple of dozen take-overs in the past year. But there are sure signs that other companies (textile consumers rather than producers) are of a mind to do some 'de-fragmentation' of their own.

It is argued that if Courtaulds begin to take over some of Marks & Spencer's main suppliers then Marks & Spencer will do something about it and do some taking over themselves. If the textile industry is as 'fragmented' as present jargon insists, there should be room enough for more than one 'de-fragmentation' exercise – or even more than two.

Companies Act Shortcomings

SIR, — We provide our members with a Status Inquiry Report service for credit assessment and therefore are vitally interested in the Companies Act 1967. We welcome the Act as it abolishes the exempt and private company status, but we are concerned with the enforcement of the disclosure provisions. At a recent meeting held to discuss the Act and its provisions, many interesting points regarding the enforcement of the Act arose. These points may be of interest to your readers:

Correspondence

- (1) It would appear that the initial filing of the documents required can be postponed at least until midsummer 1969, if not until 1970 or even later.
- (2) It would appear to be possible to avoid filing the documents at all by not laying accounts and directors' reports before an annual general meeting. The annual return could then be completed 'No accounts submitted'.
- (3) The Registrar of Companies will be inundated with a flood of documents which presumably will not be checked to ensure that they agree with the provisions of the Act but merely filed on the relevant company file. The accounts will bear an audit certificate but this does not guarantee compliance with the Act, and the directors' report requires no such certificate.
- (4) It is not at all clear that a company is conforming with the provisions of the Act where, in a particular provision requiring disclosure of certain information, the company can merely ignore the provision if it does not apply or does not seem to apply, and has no need to state that the answer is 'nil' or 'not applicable'
- (5) No attempt appears to have been made to standardize the documents to be filed. As accounts and directors' reports can be set out in a variety of designs, this not only places a burden on the Registrar but also on the people searching the files. It also will render the job of photo-copying documents more difficult and more expensive.
- (6) No attempt appears to have been made to enforce any kind of dead line for filing documents. Companies could be given a period of grace, say six months after the end of their financial year, in which to file the annual return, accounts and directors' report and then, if not filed by the deadline, to incur excess charges. Such a provision would, it is feet, increase

Controlling Contract Investment

SIR, – I wonder if you or any reader could explain (with hypothetical figures) the method of calculating the figures used in the graph in the 'Management Information' article 'Controlling contract investment', in the December 23rd issue of The Accountant?

Yours faithfully, Kempston, Bedford. C. D. PARTE.

[The basic figures for the planned and achieved return on contract investment can be obtained by calculating the profit to date which is then converted to profit level on an annual basis and expressed as a percentage of the average investment to date in the contract. This is illustrated in the following set of hypothetical figures:

Group Income Allocation in Accounts

SIR, - Your feature of this company's accounts for the year ended September 30th, 1967, under 'Finance and Commerce' in your issue of February 17th, we found most encouraging.

The 1967 accounts are the third in succession in which we have detailed the 'Allocation of group income', because we believe quite strongly that this is useful information to shareholders. We had, however, become slightly discouraged in this view because, prior to your article, no comment had appeared either favourable or unfavourable on this breakdown in any financial publication. We would, therefore, like to thank you for your comments which reinforce our belief.

We claim no originality for the inclusion of the 'tear-out' two-way proxy form incorporated in our accounts for the first time last year. As you rightly acknowledge, other companies have set the pattern and the two-way proxy is now a requirement of the Stock Exchange, London. It may be of interest to note that some 6 per cent of proxies were returned covering 20 per cent of the issued capital, virtually all voting in favour of all the resolutions.

Yours faithfully,
for General & Engineering Industries Ltd,
D. J. MANT,
London EC2.
Secretary.

Taxation Cases

Full reports of the cases summarized in these columns will be published, with Notes on the Judgments, in the 'Annotated Tax Cases'

In the Court of Session (First Division) - December 6th, 1967

Income tax – Sawmill – Loss claim – Assessments – Whether trader can fix his own prices – Appropriation of non-trading assets to trade – Whether market value deductible – Whether evidence of loss acceptable – Whether accounts acceptable – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 64, 341.

The taxpayer, who carried on the trade of a sawmiller, appealed against estimated assessments in respect of that trade, and made loss claims relative to the trade. He contended that every trader was entitled to fix his own prices for his own goods; and that a non-trading asset that had been appropriated to a trade involved a deduction for tax purposes of a sum equal to the market value of the asset.

The Special Commissioners decided the accounts submitted did not truly reflect the trading results of the sawmill; and that they were not satisfied that profits of the order of the estimated assessments were not made; and they rejected the loss claims and confirmed the assessments.

Held: it was open to the Special Commissioners to reach their conclusions in these matters.

Income tax - Office or employment - Agreement to lend services of project engineer - Salary to continue to be payable by employer - Portion of employee's time reserved to employer - Employer reimbursed part of salary - Other employees' services also lent - Gift to employee by other party to agreement - Income Tax Act 1952, section 156, Schedule 9, Rule I - Finance Act 1956, sections 10, 44, Schedule 2, paragraph I.

The South of Scotland Electricity Board (the Board) agreed with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority (the Authority) for the latter to provide the services of the taxpayer, and of other employees of the Authority, for the supervision and completion of the Hunterston Nuclear Generating Station. The Authority was entitled to retain for its own purposes one-fifth of the taxpayer's time. The taxpayer was retained in the Authority's service, and the Board reimbursed the Authority for four-fifths of his salary. All the Authority's staff, whose services were lent to the Board, were deemed to be under the control of the Board when engaged in the Board's work. The taxpayer worked at Hunterston from March 9th, 1962, till July 1st, 1964, when the station was completed, and he then left the Authority and entered the Board's service.

At Christmas, 1964, the chairman of the Board wrote to the taxpayer that all the members of the Board were delighted with the success of Hunterston, and that although the Board appreciated that he had been employed and fully remunerated by the Authority, they wished, as a mark of their appreciation, to make him a gift of £1,000.

The taxpayer was assessed under Schedule E for 1964-65 for that sum. He appealed, and the General Commissioners discharged the assessment.

Held: the General Commissioner's decision was correct.

Edwards v. Warmsley Henshall & Co

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) - December 21st, 1967

(Before Mr Justice Cross)

Income tax – Profession – Firm of accountants – Partner's visit to accountants' congress abroad – Whether expenses deductible by firm – Income Tax Act 1952, section 137 (a).

The respondents, a firm of chartered accountants in Chester, received from The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales a circular expressing the desire of the Institute that it should be worthily represented at the Eighth International Congress of Accountants to be held in New York in 1962. The firm was founded in 1880 and had clients in many parts of the world. Some of the partners had been chairmen of the Chester and North Wales Branch of the Institute. The firm considered that all the subjects to be discussed at the congress were relevant to their practice; and that such conferences were an essential part of professional life. The firm selected one of the partners to attend the conference, and he did so, and the sum spent by the firm as the cost thereof was £160 14s 8d. He would not have gone to America at the time if he had not been instructed by his partners to do so; and he did not make any arrangements for meeting anyone, or visiting any other part of the United States, until he had been so instructed.

The firm claimed to deduct this amount in computing its profit for 1963-64. In an appeal to the General Commissioners it was contended for the firm that the £160 148 8d had been incurred solely for the purpose of the firm's business; that the firm had derived specific benefits from the visit; and that the sum was deductible pursuant to section 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act 1952. For the Revenue it was contended that as the congress was held so far away, the attendance of a partner in a firm such as the respondents was not warranted; that as the partner had visited other parts of the United States during the visit, the purpose of the visit was not only to attend the congress; and that the £160 148 8d was not a deductible expense for tax purposes. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the firm.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision could not be displaced.

In re Leek

In the Court of Appeal – December 20th, 1967 (Before Lord Justice HARMAN, Lord Justice RUSSELL and Lord Justice SACHS)

Estate duty – Insurance policy – Policy money held for assured's family or for other persons having a moral claim – Or for next of kin – Trusts declared in letter from company – Whether trusts valid – Whether duty payable.

The deceased was the managing director of ϵ company, which took out a policy on his life. The policy was expressed to be effected by the company as trustee for the deceased. The company caused the policy to be held by ϵ trustee on trusts declared by a letter in 1956 by the company to the deceased. The letter directed that the policy money was to be held upon trust for the benefit of:

'such one or more of the following persons as the company in its absolute discretion shall decide namely, your wife, children or other issue or such other persons as the company may consider to have a moral claim upon you or failing them upon trust for the benefit of such one or more of the statutory next of kin in both cases in such shares and in such manner as the company in its absolute discretion shall decide.'

The deceased died in 1957, and left all his estate to his wife. The policy money was £17,890 6s 8d.

A summons was taken out to determine whether the trusts were valid. If they were, no estate duty would be payable on the £17,890 6s 8d; and if they were not valid, the £17,890 6s 8d would be part of the deceased's estate passing to his widow, and would attract estate duty at about 45 per cent.

Held (affirming the judgment of Mr Justice Buckley for other reasons): the trusts were void for uncertainty; the £17,890 68 8d passed as part of the deceased's estate to his widow; and estate duty was payable on the deceased's death.

Profiting from Change

Cost Accountants' Conference in London

PROFITABLE use of modern management tools in the rapidly changing business environment was the main topic of a conference held last week at the Connaught Rooms, London, under the auspices of the London and District Branch of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants. The conference, which was attended by over one hundred and fifty business executives and senior accountants was opened by the President of the Institute, Mr C. E. Sutton, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A. Mr C. W. Banyard, B.SC., A.C.W.A., was in the chair.

Banyard, B.SC., A.C.W.A., was in the chair.

Papers were presented to the conference by Mr H. F. R.
Perrin, M.A., director, Market Research and Long Range
Planning, P. A. Management Consultants Ltd, and Mr
G. E. Saunders, F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., director of Hoffman Manufacturing Co Ltd.

Market research as a management tool

Mr Perrin, who spoke on "The use of market research in long-range planning', stressed the importance of market research as a management tool indispensible in today's world of rapid changes in the technological, social, economic and political field.

'Industry should use market research extensively to provide the basic business intelligence which is needed by management in their decision-making processes,' Mr Perrin said. Apart from its obvious application in the sales and advertising area, market research could be profitably used in the field of research and development, licensing agreements, product policy, acquisitions and mergers, capital investment programmes and production control.

Mr Perrin warned accountants not to rely solely on financial data unsupported by adequate business intelligence. 'It is surprising, how many acquisitions and mergers, for example, are undertaken with a minimum of factual knowledge,' he said, quoting one or two examples where the buyer received a rude shock when the ful facts were available to him, whereas much information could have been discovered in advance by careful research.

Market research was, in the speaker's opinion, a very sound insurance against the impact of continuous and rapid changes in so many fields of business activity.

Poor utilization of national resources — men, money, machines and materials — was criticized by the next speaker, Mr G. E. Saunders, in his paper on 'Operating above and below normal capacity'.

Effective use of resources

'The social pattern of work, trade union attitudes to shift working and manning strength, together with the poor use of taxation policies, all seem designed to ensure that there is no incentive to use resources economically,' Mr Saunders told the conference. He emphasized that to use its resources effectively, industry must have detailed knowledge of its cost structure under varying conditions of demand, and the effect on the cost structure of using alternative resources to meet an ever-changing pattern of demand.

Defining capacity of a concern as the sum total of its physical, technical, managerial resources and marketing abilities to produce a saleable product or service, Mr Saunders went on to review various causes of over- or underutilization of capacity, the chief ones among them being inability of management to prepare long-range plans, unstable Government policies, social pressures and failure to study market conditions or forecast product obsolescence.

Expressing the view that a very small increase in productivity from existing resources would produce considerable savings to individual businesses and the country as a whole, the speaker stressed the need for a clear definition of 'capacity' related to the marketing conditions, properly assessed and continuously updated by product and production management, with the management accountant assisting in translating the quantitative data into financial figures.

'A company which is determined to meet the challenge of change will develop its plans for utilizing its capacity and develop guide-lines regardless of the fact that the accelerating rate of change may render these plans out of date,' concluded Mr Saunders.

INCOME TAX RETURN FORM 11

The Board of Inland Revenue have substantially revised income tax form 11 which is issued to the majority of business and professional people. The new form has four foolscap pages; its layout is simpler and the explanatory notes are clearer. There are now separate income columns for 'self' and 'wife'. To facilitate photocopying, the form has been arranged in such a way that all income, outgoings and capital gains appear in the middle pages.

Employed people who formerly received the form 11 will now receive a

The form P.1 which is issued to most employees is unaffected.

IN PARLIAMENT Close Companies

Mr Alan Lee Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the practice of the Inland Revenue in applying section 77 of the Finance Act 1965 to close companies owned by persons not resident in the United Kingdom.

Mr DIAMOND: Where, in the present balance of payments situation, a close company, 90 per cent or more of the ordinary share capital of which is beneficially owned by non-residents, wishes to retain its surplus funds in this country, the Inland Revenue will consider favourably a request that shortfall assessments should not be made.

Hansard, February 8th, 1968. Written answers, col. 225.

DOUBLE TAXATION: DENMARK

Discussions have taken place in Copenhagen about a revision of the double taxation convention between Denmark and the United Kingdom. Agreement was reached at official level and the text of a supplementary protocol will be submitted to Governments for approval.

THE ACCOUNTANTS' CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

Annual Dinner

Sir Cyril Black, J.P., D.L., M.P., was the principal guest at the annual dinner of The Accountants' Christian Fellowship on February 12th held at the Waldorf Hotel, London WC2, under the chairmanship of Mr Douglas Kahn, F.C.A.

Speaking to over one hundred members and their guests on 'A Christian in politics', Sir Cyril made it clear that he felt strongly that Christians should concern themselves and, if possible, take part in political and local government affairs so that they could perform the function indicated to them as 'the light of the world', 'the salt of the earth' and 'the leaven'. He denied the common impression that members of the Houses of Parliament were continually wrangling and mutually antagonistic. On most important issues, such as education and housing, all parties had the same objectives for the nation; it was on the methods of attaining those objectives that differences of opinion emerged.

Sir Cyril went on to point out the Christian practices in Parliament every day's session opened with prayers; for 150 years weekly prayer meetings had been held by members of all parties coming together informally, and for ten years there had been in existence a Christian Fellowship of members and all those whose work took them to the Palace of Westminster. Meetings of the Fellowship had been addressed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the General of the Salvation Army, and the Apostolic Delegate from Rome. All parties allowed a member latitude from the party whip to vote as his judgement dictated in the sight of God. Concluding, Sir Cyril emphasized that at the present time there were many vital questions in issue questions on which, in general, others seemed to be far more enthusiastic than Christians. What mattered was the service of God and the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as the contact provided with Divine revelation.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' HOCKEY CLUB

For the fourth year running the result of the match against the Oxford University Occasionals was decided by just one goal. This time it was the turn of the Occasionals to win a closely fought contest by two goals to one.

The Accountants were soon trailing after a shot, which appeared to be going past the post, spun slowly into the goal. However, good defensive work by Hubble and Viney kept the Occasionals in check until mid-way through the second half when the inside right broke away and pushed the ball past Morrison. Five minutes from the end, Hines, following up his own short corner, put the ball in the net, but the Accountants were unable to draw level in the closing minutes.

Chartered Accountants: D. Morrison, R. Hubble, M. Viney, P. Clarke, M. Hodder, R. Davis, D. Thomas, S. Schanschieff, A. Hines, J. Threlfall, P. Wainwright.

What can Luncheon Vouchers possibly do for productivity?

Raise it.

Industry and commerce offer many incentives to raise the level of productivity. The Luncheon Voucher service is one. Because L.V.'s ensure a proper mid-day meal for staff – every day. That means higher morale, better standards of health, the added incentive of a tax concession — and an invaluable daily break from the working environment. These are the sort of benefits that increase productivity— and that means bigger profits.

Over 20,000 U.K. employers and their staffs now benefit from the Luncheon Voucher service. And over 13,000 restaurants in the British Isles now accept L.V. s. For all-the many reasons why, read this latest brochure. A note on your business letterheading will bring you it in days.

ULCERS for ACCOUNTANTS

An exceptional opportunity exists for a young Accountant to acquire an ulcer. Our client will create this opportunity by delegating an excessive amount of authority and responsibility to a young man, thus ensuring that he is overworked and underpaid. The well developed accounting and management information systems need constant refinement. Bright ideas for improvements will therefore be insisted upon.

The appointee will be in frequent contact with top management, and will be forced to express his views on how efficiency can be improved and profitability increased. These opinions could also be demanded in respect of existing subsidiaries and prospective acquisitions.

The job is with a heavy engineering company in the North of England, so pioneering or missionary qualities are essential. If all this does not produce an ulcer, then he will be obliged to learn something about the third generation computer on which most of the routine work is done. Our client has informed his existing staff of this vacancy since they have no time to read the 'sits vac' advertisements. Age bracket 23-33. Salary will be haggled over. If you believe that hard work never killed anyone, find out how wrong you can be, by writing in the first instance to:

> J. H. Judd, Esq. (REF. A.1) Walter Judd Limited 47 Gresham Street LONDON EC2.

LIMITED

A Prosperous Year

Abridged Statement by the Chairman, circulated with the Report and Accounts for the year ended 31 December, 1967

Group Results

I am pleased to report that the Group has had a prosperous year and has further extended its activities.

A dividend of 22 per cent has been received from Kleinwort Benson Investment Trust, the same as the normal dividend last year when, in addition, a special dividend of 3 per cent was paid for tax purposes. Kleinwort Benson has paid a dividend of £960,000 against £750,000 last year. The reduction in other income shown in the consolidated profit and loss account of the holding company is mainly due to the receipt last year of a subvention payment from the banking company. In view of the provisions of the Finance Act 1967, such a payment is not necessary this year.

An interim dividend of 7 per cent was paid in September last and a final dividend of 15 per cent is now proposed, making a total of 22 per cent for the year, compared with 20 per cent last year. It is the intention of the Board to reduce the disparity between the interim and final dividends and, subject to conditions then ruling, the interim dividend payable in September next will be raised from 7 per cent to 10 per cent.

In order further to reduce my business commitments I have decided to retire from the chairmanship with effect from the Annual General Meeting, although remaining a member of the Board. I am glad to say that Mr. Cyril H. Kleinwort, who is already Chairman of Kleinwort Benson, has been appointed to take my place.

Ernest G. Kleinwort

Kleinwort, Benson Limited

The consolidated earnings of Kleinwort Benson for the year were substantially better than those of the previous year and there was a general expansion in all sections of the company's business. The attached accounts disclose a profit, after taxation and transfers to contingencies of £1,296,202, compared with £1,021,940 last year. £300,000 has been allocated to General Reserves and a dividend of £960,000 paid to the holding company.

These figures and the higher balance sheet totals reflect another extremely busy year for the banking division despite the maintenance of the credit restrictions and the uncertain economic conditions. As a leading operator in the Euro-currency field, we were able not only to extend our activities in our traditional areas overseas, but also to meet U.K. customers' requirements in the field of exports. It is very satisfactory to note that the direct financing of exports has now been removed from the credit squeeze limits. It is gratifying to be able to report an increase in the figure of acceptances on behalf of customers from £28 million to £36 million.

In our Euro-currency business Kleinwort, Benson (Europe) S.A. is performing an increasingly important role.

In Australia, our associate company, Merchant Bills Corporation of Melbourne, is trading profitably

The Group has extended its interests into aircraft leasing and we hope to

In the field of company finance we have again been very active. Corporation tax has continued to militate against the issue of Ordinary shares and capital raising has thus relied, wherever feasible, upon other forms of finance. Corporation tax has also contributed to the acceleration of the trend towards mergers, affecting also their techniques. In merger and take-over activities reached a new intensity and our advice was sought in a large number of cases.

We have experienced a continued demand for investment management and advisory services, while our interest in the management company of the highly successful M & G Group has enabled us to profit usefully from the expansion of Unit Trusts.

Our Channel Islands companies have had another successful year's trading in their highly specialised fields with profit both to our Group and to the Islands themselves.

Monetary uncertainties have led to a strong demand for bullion and our subsidiary, Sharps, Pixley & Co., has had an active year. The increased turnover has benefited profits which on this occasion represent 18 months' trading.

During the year, Mr. H. K. Andreae and Mr. Peter Wake retired from the Board of Kleinwort, Benson for reasons of health, and Mr. R. F. Medlicott and Mr. F. J. Read resigned to devote more time to other business interests. We would like to thank each of them for the valued contribution which they have made to the affairs of the Company.

Cyril H. Kleinwort

Kleinwort Benson Investment Trust Limited

of the Trust after thirty-six years' service in that office. I would like to take this opportunity of saying how much his valuable services to the Company since its inception have been appreciated and how glad I am that he is staying with us as a member of the Board.

Towards the end of the year it was decided to change the name of the Trust to Kleinwort Benson Investment Trust Limited, thus bringing the name of the two principal subsidiary companies of Kleinwort, Benson, Lonsdale Limited

Gross revenue amounted to £995,198 compared with £1,015,983 for the previous year, a reduction of some £20,000. Owing to tax changes, the amounts after allowing for taxation are not com-parable. Earnings on the Ordinary Capital were 24.2 per cent compared with 26 per cent for 1966 although we were obliged to make provision for Corpora-tion tax at the higher rate of 42½ per cent from last April, whilst the benefit from the higher exchange rate on dollar investment income due to devaluation only applied to dividends received in the last six weeks of 1967. The dividend on the Trust's Ordinary Stock has been maintained at 22 per cent, which represents a distribution of 923 per cent. Last year, in addition, a special dividend of 3 per cent was paid in order to enable the holding company to obtain the maximum tax benefit, thereby absorbing nearly the whole of the available revenue. Estimates of the current year's income suggest that the present dividend should be covered this year, although with a smaller margin. Some £10,000 of income tax relief which is still available against tax on distributions to be made in the current year, is being carried forward.

The capital value of the Trust has risen during the year by some £6 million to a figure of over £24 million, giving a net asset value to the 5s. units of 33s. 11d. compared with 23s. 9d. at the previous year end. These values contain 75 per cent of the ruling investment dollar

With the dollar premium now over 30 per cent and a probably severe budget to be presented to the country in March, it is difficult to make any forecasts for the future. It is still, however, the basic policy of your Board to retain a substantial investment in the American economy and in the equities of British companies which appear to have prospects of growth.

A legacy for the Methodist Homes for the Aged is a means many generous people adopt in expressing gratitude for their own home and for serenity and peace-of-mind in their old age.

There are so many who are less fortunate and for lonely and anxious old people the Methodist Homes for the Aged are a haven and a home. Our constantly growing income from legacies, more than any other factor, has enabled us to embark on the capital expenditure for twenty-six Homes. Unfortunately even these will accommodate only a few of the hundreds of deserving people on the tragically long waiting list.

We thankfully acknowledge this valuable assistance and ask you please to remember the Methodist Homes for the Aged when advising your clients.

STOCK MARKET PRICES

The third edition of Extel's unique service will be published at the end of April. This will cover the fiscal years 1965/66, 1966/67 and 1967/68, to be supported during 1968/69 by three cumulative supplements in July, October and January as usual.

The new edition will contain details of all fixed interest stocks and government securities, thus creating the only fully comprehensive list of all quoted securities in the U.K. and Eire, together with their 6th April 1965 valuations adjusted where necessary.

Inland Revenue inspectors throughout the country will again be using the service during 1968/69, thus demonstrating the Revenue's confidence in a service which is now regarded as the standard work on the valuation of quoted securities for Capital Gains Tax purposes.

Subscription for the 1968/69 fiscal year £10.

DIVIDEND RECORD

The 1967/68 edition of the annual Dividend Record will also be available at the end of April. This will give details of the dividends paid during 1967/68 on both the Preference and Ordinary Share Capital of all Companies quoted in the U.K. and Eire, together with the relevant dates for payment, entitlement, ex-div. and financial year end. The rate of tax applicable to each dividend is shown and scrip and rights issues are also indicated as a further useful guide.

The Dividend Record is an essential complement to the Capital Issues Service and is designed to ease the tedious burden of tax returns.

Cost of the 1967/68 Dividend Record £15.

Both volumes may be taken together at the special rate of £20 and are offered on approval for fourteen days.

Executive Remuneration

THE realization of external equilibrium and continuous economic growth depends in large measure upon the efficiency of industrial management. Critics are not lacking who aver that British management falls short of what the nation needs. In a new study entitled Executive Remuneration in the United Kingdom (Longmans, 21s), Professor A. J. MERRETT argues that the country gets the quality of management for which it is prepared to pay. And because executive rewards are relatively low, the average quality of entrant into this complex and difficult field falls short of what is required at the present time.

According to the author, British executive pay reflects the relatively low status of the occupation. For example, whereas in Britain the average managing director earns about three times a university professor's salary and about 60 per cent more than a top Civil Servant, in the U.S.A. – where executive efficiency is an article of faith – the relative rates of remuneration are five times the academic's and four times that of a top Civil Servant. Similarly, the senior executive in Britain earns about twelve times as much as a skilled manual worker; in the U.S.A. he makes about thirty-five times as much.

Not merely does the American executive earn more in a comparable appointment, Professor Merrett calculates for U.K. and U.S. corporations of comparable size that the figures would be £26,500 compared with £14,000, plus a stock option worth to the American a further £12,200 taxable as capital gains and not ordinary income; but he would also keep much more after tax, i.e. £27,500 against only £6,900. In the apt comment of a new atudy of the Common Market legal structure, Europe and the Law, from the Conservative Political Centre (10s net) on U.K. tax rates, if competition is the key word of the enlarged (Common) Market, there must be some purpose in competing.

It is, as Professor Merrett affirms, this competitive environment in which executives have a much higher mobility between jobs that produces results. Whereas the British executive has greater security – for he can hardly afford to take chances of having to rely on his own resources – the American can take risks if only because the rewards match up to the risks. The Conservative Party booklet on European Law mentioned above, quotes figures showing that the top tax rates for a married man with two children in France, West Germany and Sweden are 68, 53 and 65 per cent respectively, compared with over 91 per cent in Britain and 70 in the U.S.A. The top U.S. rates applies only after some £142,000!

It is common knowledge that U.S. corporate life is, in general, more demanding upon the individual than is the case in Britain. In the U.K., for instance, it is not usually necessary for the executive (or his wife) to devote many hours to business entertaining as it is in the U.S.A. Professor Merrerr's findings suggest that the American executive works substantially longer hours, particularly in the ranks of the less senior executives.

The relatively higher profitability of American subsidiaries in Britain than indigenous companies suggests, states Professor Merrett, as does the greater profitability of such subsidiaries with American as against British managers, that American management is better. Whether the state of affairs is due only to the differences in take-home pay, or whether other factors such as American attitudes to money and corporate life play a significant part, we do not know. But this new study lends weight to what a lot of people in Britain have been thinking for some time past.

Investment in Nationalized Industries

THERE must be many readers of this journal who will be slightly surprised to be told that a decade or more ago one of the biggest bones of contention between the political parties was the nationalized industries. Nowadays Parliamentary discussion of their affairs tends to be muted; thirteen years of Conservative rule left the nationalized industries, with the exception of steel, largely intact. The cynic may be tempted to point out that this was the only industry making sufficient profits to stimulate any hope that the private investor would buy it back!

Nevertheless even if, or possibly because, the major political parties now take the nationalized industries for granted and in any case do not interfere in the day-to-day conduct of their affairs, it is essential that their activities be kept under surveillance by the consumer and taxpayer. They are responsible for almost one-fifth of all investment in the U.K. They are major employers of labour whose decisions on pay affect wage rates throughout the economy. They are statutory monopolies whose pricing policies affect every house-hold in the land.

For such reasons any piece of research on the nationalized industries deserves attention even it, as is the case with Mr George Polyani's critique just published by the Institute of Economic Affairs, it appears to be over-critical. In his study entitled Comparative Returns from Investment in Nationalized Industries (I.E.A., 21s), Mr POLYANI is concerned primarily with one aspect of the nationalized industries' record, that is, the rate of return achieved on their substantial, indeed massive, investment of consumers' and taxpayers' funds. Admittedly, this is the first of several memoranda which are to be published on the nationalized sector by the Institute of Economic Affairs and it is perhaps to be regretted that in devoting it to an aspect of the nationalized industries which by itself reflects little credit on them, the reader with little background knowledge of the subject may get a misleading impression.

On the other hand, the questing reader will learn a lot from Mr Polyani's researches, both in the field of financial statistics — there is a substantial appendix of tables — and into the now largely forgotten but, nevertheless, relevant discussions on the criteria upon which the nationalized industries should base their pricing policies. Mr Polyani considers these because, as he fairly concludes, the one objective criterion of the efficiency of an industry is its profitability. On this point it would have been interesting to have had the author's detailed comments and analysis of the attitudes of successive Governments as reflected in the series of White Papers discussing the finances of the nationalized industries.

Mr Polyani recognizes that the principle of assessing the efficiency of the nationalized industries by reference to the rate of profit earned upon capital, is affected by the extent to which the industry is prepared to exploit its monopoly position and, in the other direction, the extent to which the Government imposes upon it social obligations which run counter to pure efficiency in financial terms. On the other hand, what other criteria are there? The author reviews the marginal cost rule and notes that the rule tries merely to copy the end-result of a competitive market situation, although it rejects the method of profit-seeking by which the result is obtained in a competitive market.

If social needs are to be taken into account in the conduct of the nationalized industries' affairs, then what better criteria are there than those determined by means of cost-benefit analysis? Mr Polyani has no difficulty in rejecting this approach on the grounds that it involves over-much estimation based largely on subjective valuation of selected variables. Even so, he justifies his use of the profit criterion primarily upon the grounds that it is of general application – at least as a standardized measure – to both the private and public sectors of industry.

On this basis his estimates show that since 1955 net returns on investment in the nationalized industries have ranged between one-sixth and one-third of that earned by private industry, that is, 2 to 4 per cent compared with 12 to 17 per cent. The low average rate of return in these industries was largely due to the poor performance of the fuel industries as a group with under 5 per cent on net assets, and more especially transport which made an overall loss equal to over 2 per cent on the net assets employed. Somewhat surprisingly even the Electricity Board, which accounts for so large a proportion of the public sector's investment earned a mere 5.1 per cent on its net assets. Since the fuel and transport industries dominate the public sector, it is not surprising that the distinctly better performance of the nationalized airlines should be completely swamped.

It will be interesting to see how future memoranda on this controversial subject deal with the problems of the industries in the public sector. No doubt the basic thesis will be that proper use of the pricing mechanism would achieve a more rational, in economic terms, allocation of resources. It is unlikely that anyone in those industries would dispute that conclusion but would point out that the conduct of affairs has not always, it ever, been dictated by purely economic and financial considerations. It is rather hard to blame the nationalized industries for the short-comings of the politicians.

The real question which most taxpayers will ask is how these industries can produce their product or service more cheaply, or at least more efficiently. Answers to these questions probably require a much more detailed examination of the industries' affairs than that possible on the financial evidence alone. On the other hand, Mr Pclyani and his co-authors can reasonably claim that, by allowing the industries to operate on the basis of rational economic criteria and protecting the weaker members of Society by benefits appropriate to their needs, the end result might be advantageous not merely to the industries themselves but also to the taxpayer and user.

New Agreement on Government Contracts

N a statement to the House of Commons on Monday the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, Mr John Diamond, M.P., F.C.A., announced that the Government had reached agreement with industry for the immediate implementation of new arrangements for placing and pricing non-competitive Government contracts, covered by the existing profit formula.

The two issues which have been the subject of detailed discussion between the Government and industry were the need to secure a contractual right to equality of information and post-costing, and the profit formula used in the contracts. The Government has made it clear, said Mr Diamond, that there could be no question of paying a price for the equality of information which the Second Lang Report had recommended for the fixing of fair and reasonable prices.

The Government has also insisted on the right to post-cost individual contracts, and industry has acquiesced in the use of new contractual conditions which meet the Government's essential requirements.

The Government and industry have agreed that the aim of the formula should be to give contractors a fair return on capital employed; that is to say, equal, on average, to the overall return earned by British industry in recent years. The yardstick will be the average of industry's earnings over the last seven years for which figures are available – 1960–66. This gives a figure of 14 per cent on capital employed.

Given the complex accounting issues involved there will be further urgent discussions with industry on the rates to be applied to achieve this aim.

The Government recognizes the importance of fair profits for its contractors, said Mr Diamond, and means to ensure that outstanding efficiency should be rewarded. This could be done by agreeing a fixed price (which limits the Government's financial liabilities) at an early stage. This gave the contractor a strong incentive to increase his profits by improving his efficiency. Alternatively, target prices can be agreed with suitable profit-sharing provisions in appropriate cases.

The Government accepts the view of the Second Lang Report that fixed prices freely negotiated should in general not be retrospectively modified. The main uses of post-costing would therefore be not to renegotiate prices but to price follow-on orders, to check the accuracy of cost estimates, and to provide necessary cost information.

Nevertheless, arrangements had to be made to deal with excessive profits, given that there was no competitive check on the agreed prices. With equality of information and post-costing, the risk was substantially diminished, but selective post-costing could still indicate cases where excessive profits may have been earned. The basic issue would be whether the original price was fair and reasonable, and whether the profit was fairly earned by outstanding efficiency.

Agreement has been reached on a proposal to set up an impartial Review Board, and to secure acceptance of its rulings by a new contractual condition. Both sides could refer contracts where profits of $27\frac{1}{2}$ per cent or more on capital employed and losses of 15 per cent or more had been made, to establish whether any reimbursement or compensation was justified. In exexceptional cases the Board might review contracts referred to it by either side within these percentages, where there was evidence that prices had not been fair and reasonable.

In addition to reviewing individual contracts and giving rulings which both sides would agree in advance to accept, the Review Board would also be given the task of collating the evidence for a review of average earnings on contracts. For this purpose the Review Board would act in an advisory capacity. A review after three years, which could relate actual earnings on this work to the latest trends in overall average earnings of British industry, would be in the interests of both sides.

More Budget Advice

THE wheels of Budget machinery grind slow and it is unlikely that much of the advice recently proffered to Mr Jenkins has any chance of being considered before Budget Day on March 19th. Nevertheless, last week the Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants put forward a memorandum which we reproduce in full on other pages in this issue. Some of the representations will be familiar to our readers, but they are nonetheless persuasive for that. It is to be hoped that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has already decided to do something about some of the topics.

Representations made by The Institute of Taxation in January were also published last week. In view of present economic circumstances the representations have been confined to some of the technical points or questions which have arisen in the practices of members of the Institute, most of whom it is said are barristers, solicitors, accountants, or specialist practitioners.

One suggestion is that losses on short-term gain principles ought to be available for set-off against long-term capital gains. Another is that in the cases of a consortium, losses of parent companies ought to be available for set-off against profits of subsidiaries.

The Institute thinks that the anti-dividend stripping provisions of section 65 of the Finance Act 1965 should not apply to transfers within a group. Where a close company suffers a restriction of allowable directors' remuneration, it is suggested that the excess should be available for carry forward and set off against profits of a subsequent year where this does not bring the allowable remuneration above the statutory limit of the later year.

The £1,500 exemption under the shortfall provisions should be extended to associated companies where their combined profits are below the limit. The Institute would also like to see a restriction of the scope of section 408 of the Income Tax Act 1952 so that it does not apply to bona fide loans by a company not made for tax avoidance purposes.

Bill to Safeguard Clients' Money

APRIVATE member's Bill just published could make it an offence for people carrying on certain businesses and professions to mix their clients' money with their own. Persons aimed at by the Bill are accountants, architects, auctioneers, business transfer agents, estate agents, surveyors and travel agents. The list would be capable of variation by the Board of Trade from time to time. It does not include solicitors as they, of course, are already subject to stringent rules.

Clause 2 of the Bill empowers the Board of Trade to make rules 'for the purpose of safeguarding clients' moneys and providing for interest thereon whilst in the custody or control of' what the clause terms an 'agent', which is defined as a person carrying on any of the businesses referred to. Under the rules the 'agent' would have to pay the client's money without delay into a client account; all withdrawals would be covered, he would have to keep full records of client account movements, and the accounts would be examined by a qualified auditor.

There could be different rules for different businesses; obviously rules suitable for a travel agent might be unsuitable for an accountant. Clause 3 contains provision for compulsory inspection of books and accounts by Board of Trade officials. Clause 4 provides for a modest rate of interest in favour of the client in respect of sums of £1,000 and over kept for three months or more. The penalty for an offence would not exceed £500.

Capital Allowances Act 1968

THE Capital Allowances Act 1968 which received the Royal Assent on February 1st, has now been published (H.M.S.O., price 11s). It incorporates, and repeals, section 21 of the Finance Act 1967 including subsection (4) thereof which was passed in order to resolve certain doubts that had arisen as to the meaning of the earlier legislation. There is a certain symmetry about the Act in that it has exactly one hundred sections and twelve schedules. Whether, in fact, so much verbosity is necessary for a single aspect of direct taxation in Britain is highly debatable – but that, of course, is not an exception. A great many people must spend an immense amount of time working through these com-

Banks Prepare for Decimalization

T has been announced that, following the changeover to decimal currency in 1971, the banks will continue their established practice of not accounting for fractions of the lowest monetary unit. This means that the half new penny will be disregarded on cheques and for accounting purposes. The banks will, however, issue and receive coins of this amount over the counter.

The British Bankers' Association have set up a steering committee, a working party and a number of specialist study groups to deal with problems arising from decimalization of the currency. These bodies are to work closely with the Decimal Currency Board on all aspects affecting banking.

The steering committee, of fourteen members, has representatives at general manager level from the clearing banks, Scottish banks, Irish banks, British overseas and commonwealth banks, and the Bank of England. It will give guidance and decisions to the working party and study groups on all matters of decimalization except those of highest policy needing reference to constituent bodies.

The working party is responsible to the steering committee and will act as the dynamo for the banks' activities. It will be the first point of reference in the banks for the Decimal Currency Board, and will appear before the Board's special committees on all matters within its competence. The working party will also be available for consultation with outside bodies. It will sift all the reports of the study groups and when appropriate will pass them on, with its own reports and recommendations, to the steering committee.

The specialist study groups so far established will concern themselves with coinage, machines, stationery design, branch routines, staff training, and publicity.

Accounting Research Report

HE late Percy Dewe Leake left the residue of his estate to The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to be held in trust as the P. D. Leake Trust Fund. His will provided that the Institute should use the income of the trust fund for such purposes falling within the legal definition of charity as would be likely to benefit and advance the sciences of accounting and of political economy. The committee, consisting of five members of the Council of the Institute, appointed to administer the fund has just issued its fifteenth report covering the year ended October 31st, 1967.

The disposable income for the period was £,16,592 as against £17,683 for the previous year. Grants totalled £19,383 (as against £15,229) thus decreasing the balance on income account by £2,791 to £92,093. The capital funds at the balance sheet date amounted to £227,424 an increase because of surpluses on investments realized of £2,984 on the year. The combined capital and income account thus totalled £319,517. Of this sum, £,289,800 was invested in quoted securities the middle market value of which at October 31st last was £391,675. Understandably, the Council has decided to continue to hold the major part of the funds in

During the year the committee has financed a number of research fellowships and has been in negotiation for the establishment of teaching fellowships in accounting and related subjects at the universities represented on the Joint Standing Committee of the Universities and the Accountancy Profession. So far six teaching fellowships have been awarded, the grant in each case being £1,750 with a reasonable contribution to overhead expenses subject to an overall limit of f,2,200.

Included in the many activities of Professor J. R. N. Stone, C.B.E., M.A., P. D. Leake Professor of Finance and Accounting at Cambridge University, are the continuation of his researches into the problem of British economic growth and the presentation of the Sixth Annual Lecture of the Automation Council on the topical subject of 'Our Unstable Economy; Can Planning Succeed?'

Industrial Trends

HE latest sample inquiry into industrial and export trends, conducted among its member firms by the Confederation of British Industry covered 1,382 companies which together account for 40 per cent of Britain's exports and about one-tenth of its labour force. Despite the C.B.I. strictures on devaluation and the Government's role in the aftermath of the devaluation it seems, at least from the survey results, that the majority of companies agree with the Government that they are now confronted with substantial opportunities for expanding their overseas sales.

Nearly 60 per cent of the respondent firms expect export orders and deliveries during the next few months to rise. According to the report, such expectations justify the conclusion that by next year the balance of payments should be in surplus, even if it will fall far short of the £500 million target set for the end of

There are marked differences of attitude between the different industrial sectors. Manufacturers supplying the consumer market are significantly less cheerful about their prospects than are, for example, manufacturers of capital equipment. Some support justifying the latter group's optimism is provided by the statements of many large firms that they anticipate spending more on capital equipment this year.

On the other hand, export markets apart, there is little enthusiasm or optimism in other fields. The proportion of respondent firms which is optimistic about trading conditions generally is not significantly higher than when the last survey was held last October. Half of the respondents are neither more nor less optimistic than they were, while those who are more optimistic are only fractionally more numerous than those who are less optimistic than they were in October.

The scope for industrial expansion is evident from the figure of 61 per cent of respondent companies which are working below full capacity. It is noteworthy that almost three-quarters of the respondents believe that the most important factor likely to restrain output during the coming four months will be lack of orders. In the survey of exporting companies it is equally noteworthy that similar reasons are given for believing that the company's ability to obtain export orders will be limited.

Admittedly, the survey was carried out when the economic situation and prospects were more unsettled than usual. Even so, industry does not seem to be as cheerful as Ministers would wish.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

MY friend Donald who is assistant accountant in a local shoe factory has been unhappy in his job recently. Some rat-racing in the management structure of his company had rather upset him, so he asked me if he could come along for a chat about career prospects in general.

We both realized, of course, that he was subconsciously hoping that there might be a suitable job available for him in our place in the foreseeable future, and that our discussion might prove the thin edge of the wedge. Face was saved, however, by my comment that we really had nothing appropriate to his high level of responsibility, and by his immediate assurance that he wasn't applying for anything. He was merely doing some preliminary exploration. At such higher levels of sophisticated urbanity do accountants converse.

After some introductory comments he produced a typewritten schedule of his career to date, what we used to call a*curriculum vitae in days gone by. It was all there. School, and exams, and birthplace and rugby exploits (he knew that I've a soft spot for a good wingforward) and experience with standard costings and tax computations. Going through these details line by line with an applicant gives him a chance to amplify and do a spot of judicious line-shooting, so it's an essential exercise.

Just then Prinny, our personnel director, dropped in with an apparently off-hand query about his training budget – a piece of strategy that he and I had planned previously so that he in turn could review the prospect unobtrusively. Donald talked on cheerfully, I inserted careful leading questions, and the picture commenced to take shape.

My problem on these occasions was simple. I wanted to know how Donald would acquit himself as a senior member of the accounts team. Could he lead and inspire his subordinates, stand up to argumentative directors, or to overbearing colleagues in other departments, and take responsibility readily in emergency? With the present-day malaise of 'couldn't-care-less' and 'I'm-all-right, Jack' it's vital to have senior staff who'll fight for improvements rather than tamely accept the status quo.

The man who strives to develop promising juniors, or who can be relied upon to deal justly but firmly with malcontents, is a valuable asset in any business. The trouble is, I find it very difficult to analyse what lies behind the usual smooth-faced composure across the desk. . . . I sometimes wonder how accurately I myself was assessed at the various interviews I'd attended as an applicant in the past.

Prinny, unfortunately, rather fouled the lines with his abstruse phychological jargon. He dropped in loaded questions like 'How far do you believe in creative endeavour team-wise?' and 'What's your fundamental philosophy in business life in the absolute?'

This novel phraseology rather disconcerted Donald, whose own jargon became cryptic in its turn. 'I like the broad-brush approach', he answered. 'Value judgements in depth and all that, you know, but essentially blue-sky thinking at all levels'. Prinny asked whether Donald thought that T-group training in staff sensitivity testing might be intrinsically negative, and the accountant explained that he favoured a basic grass-roots appraisal of potential – man-to-man, rather than bashing about with snap judgements in free-foralls. Tear a strip off a bod and he knows the score, or else lift him a rung or so. That way you can't fog the picture.

After a while I just sat back and let them talk themselves out. We seemed to be using three different and mutually incomprehensible languages. I couldn't see the solution to my own problem, or Donald's, in either of them by B. D. EASLICK, F.T.I.I.

HERE it is found desirable, for commercial and Vother reasons, for operations to be carried on by a group of companies, section 20 of the Finance Act 1953 used to provide a method whereby the deficit of one company could be made good out of the surplus of another company. The surplus company was able to make a 'subvention payment' to the deficit company under an enforceable agreement within two years from the end of the relevant accounting period, such a payment being treated as a trading expense of the surplus company and a trading receipt of the deficit company on the last day of the accounting period for which the payment was made. The provisions only applied when the required relationship existed throughout the whole period, and the maximum payment was restricted to the lower of the deficit or surplus for each company.

Subvention payments applied, not only to income tax, but also to corporation tax accounting periods, but section 20 and Schedule 10 of the Finance Act 1967 now provide that in respect of any accounting period (A.P.) ending after July 21st, 1967, subvention payments will not apply; and group relief will apply.

To whom available

The new provisions apply to bodies corporate resident in the U.K. which are either:

- (1) members of a group of companies; or
- (2) members of consortia.

In this connection two companies are regarded as members of a group if one is the subsidiary of the other, or both are subsidiaries of a third company. A subsidiary company means that the holding company must own, either directly or through another company or companies, not less than three-quarters of the ordinary share capital, excluding any share capital the sale of which would produce a trading receipt, and share capital in a body corporate not resident in the U.K.

A company is a member of a consortium if it, together with four or fewer companies between them, directly own all of the ordinary share capital of another company (which company is also then a member of the consortium) provided that no claim for group relief may be made by a member of a consortium if a profit on the sale of that ordinary share capital would be treated as a trading receipt.

Relief for companies owned by a consortium is available where the surrendering company is:

- (1) a trading company which
 - (a) is not a subsidiary, or

- (b) is a 90 per cent subsidiary of one holding company owned by the consortium (and not a subsidiary of any other company); or
- (2) a holding company which is owned by the consortium (not being a subsidiary of any company), and the claimant company is a member of the consortium.

Method

Relief, for 'losses etc.' may be surrendered by the 'surrendering company' and claimed by the 'claimant company'.

No inter-company agreements are required, and it is not necessary for any payment for group relief to be made. If, however, a payment is made it is to be ignored completely in computing profits for corporation tax purposes, and is not to be treated as a distribution or a charge on income.

A 'payment for group relief' means a payment made by the claimant company to the surrendering company, in pursuance of an agreement between them, up to the amount surrendered by way of group relief.

As already stated, it is not necessary for any payment to be made at all but the claimant company can pay, if it wishes, a sum to the surrendering company, up to the amount of the loss taken over. Such a payment must be in pursuance of an agreement between them and may be a useful means of transferring funds from one company to another.

Types of loss

The following types of 'losses etc.' for the accounting period of the surrendering company may be offset against the total profits of the claimant company for its corresponding period:

- (a) Case I trading loss,
- (b) certain excess non-trading capital allowances,
- (c) excess management expenses in an investment company, and
- (d) excess charges on income.

Relation of group relief to other relief

In the claimant company the allowance for group relief will be deducted from the original chargeable profits before allowing for any relief derived from a subsequent accounting period (i.e. losses etc. of a later A.P. related back to this A.P.; transitional relief for cessation of trade under section 87, Finance Act 1965; and terminal loss relief).

Corresponding accounting periods

The 'corresponding period' of the claimant company is any A.P. which falls wholly or partly within the A.P. of the surrendering company. Where the A.P.s of the surrendering company and the claimant company do not coincide, the loss of the surrendering company is apportioned on a time basis and only that part of the loss

It is important to notice that relief shall not be given more than once in respect of the same amount.

Requirements of a valid claim

Claims (1) need not be for the full amount; (2) they require the consent of the surrendering company to be notified to the tax inspector; and (3) they must be made within two years from the end of the surrendering company's A.P. to which the claim relates.

A claim for consortium relief must receive the consent of all members of the consortium. If excess relief is given, recovery of the tax over-relieved may be made by assessment under Case VI.

Following the House of Lords' decision in the case of Davies, Jenkins & Co (being a reversal of the Court of Appeal decision) it was held that for a subvention payment to be allowed to the paying company, it was not necessary for the receiving company to be trading at the time of payment,

In the 1967 Finance Act it does not appear to be necessary for a company to be actually trading at the time when group relief is claimed.

Group relief is to be ignored in the calculation of both (1) the three-year surplus, and (2) overspill relief.

The giving of group relief can be 'one of the circumstances' giving rise to liability under section 28, Finance Act 1960 (cancellation of tax advantages from certain transactions in securities).

An example is appended of a computation for corporation tax where the conditions for group relief are satisfied.

MANAGEMENT INFORMATION

Maximizing Profits with Scarce Resources

Plargely left to the province of cost control, and a very large proportion of management effort has been absorbed by the problems of allocation and control of resources within the business itself. Typically the reaction of management to the need to increase profits (or arrest their decline) is to carry out a cost reduction programme. One would not deny the importance of management control in this area, where, of course, it has an important role to play. It may, however, be questioned whether the amount of effort expended in this direction produces as worthwhile a return in terms of profit maximization as would a similar amount of effort devoted to maximizing the return from sales.

Profit is, in fact, determined not only by the cost of manufacturing and distribution, but also by the price that customers are prepared to pay for the product, and subject to how 'cost' is defined, profit is the difference between the two.

Traditional cost/price relationship

Traditionally, there has been a tendency to fix prices by ascertaining the total costs of the business that have been apportioned to the product, and adding to this a percentage mark-up for profit. This method has certainly ensured that prices are planned to cover total costs. Each firm, however, computes its costs in its own way and it is largely only by chance that any two firms making the same article in exactly the same way would arrive at the same price.

This method also tends to ignore the fact that selling price is determined not so much by the firm itself, but by what its customers are prepared to pay for the products and by what its competitors sell them for. A business needs to be able to measure the margin between what it can sell each product for and what each 'costs', in such a way as to identify what is most profitable. Only in this way can it set out a logical pattern of selling effort.

Identifying sources of profit

In order to establish a meaningful pricing and selling strategy, a company must be able to identify which sources are contributing the most to its profits, whether the source be defined as product, type of customer, geographical area, etc. The difficulty in establishing a measure of the profit contribution lies in the definition of 'cost'. While actual selling prices can be established without much difficulty, the cost of a product cannot. Indirect costs are distributed to products in an arbitrary way according to assumptions as to volume and the proportions each product should bear. What is missing in such a process is an appreciation of the way in which costs behave in differing conditions. This appreciation is crucial to a real understanding of the profit contribution of different products.

Today, the difference between fixed and variable costs is fairly well understood, particularly in relation to volume and its effects on average cost. As far as selling policy is concerned, however, little effort has been made to apply the underlying relationships to establishing a rational policy. For too long our thinking has been in terms of measuring product profitability by the observed margin between total cost and selling price.

Consider the costs of two products as set out in Table 1. On the face of it each product is equally profitable, making a profit of £1 on each £7 of sales.

			Product A	Product B

Overheads		 	 1.6	2.6
			6.0	6∙0
Profit marg	in	 	 1.0	1-0

Selling price	e	 	 £7:0	£7·0

If, however, we now analyse the behaviour of the overheads and ascertain that approximately 50 per cent of them are fixed, then we can see that, as shown in Table 2, the profitability of each product is no longer equal. Product B makes a contribution towards fixed overheads and profit of 32.9 per cent of sales as against the 25.7 per cent contribution of product A.

Contribution

The measurement of contribution in the example above is the difference between the variable costs (materials, labour and variable overheads) and the selling price of the product. Is this a rational measurement of product profitability? Contribution is, by definition, a measure of the amount contributed by a product towards meeting the total of fixed costs and profit. Up to the break-even volume, contribution will go towards meeting fixed costs. At the break-even volume, total contribution will exactly equal fixed overheads, and above the break-even point the contribution from each unit sold will add to profit.

Since the overall contribution earned by a company is subject only to the deduction of a constant value of fixed costs in arriving at profit, then it is a valid assumption that if contribution is maximized, then so also is profit. In determining the sources of profit, therefore, the company should be concerned with the relationships between contribution and sales, and should orient sales effort to those areas in which the sales provide the higher contribution/sales ratio, rather than those with a lower one.

Where there are no restricting factors other than the ability of the business to sell its products, then the maximization of profit will depend upon the ability of management to maximize the contribution/sales ratio for its product mix.

Scarce resources

Where there are restricting factors on sales other than that mentioned above, e.g., where there is a limiting production capacity, then the contribution/sales ratio may no longer be the criterion of profitability. No longer can a company produce all that it can sell, and therefore profitability must be measured against the constraining factor.

The maximization of total contribution will still be the objective of management, but instead of maximizing this against total sales, it must be maximized against the use each product makes of the scarce resource.

Assume that two products are manufactured and that product A requires four hours of machine time and product B ten hours, and that machine time is the factor which is limiting sales, then the identification of the profitable line will proceed along the lines shown on Table 3. Product A yields two and a half times the contribution per unit of the scarce resource than does product B, and is therefore a much more desirable product in these particular circumstances.

• • •	•		Product A	Product B
Materials			2.0	4.0
Labour			5.0	4.0
Variable overheads		٠	3.0	2.0
			10.0	10.0
Contribution			4.0	4.0
Selling price			£14·0	£14·0
Contribution/sales ratio			28.6	28.6
			per cent	per cent
Machine hours per unit	of produc	et	4	10
Contribution per machin	ne hour		£1.0	£0.4

The calculation of the contribution per unit of the scarce resource provides management with a ranking of desirability for each of its products, and it will maximize its profits the more it moves the sales mix away from these products with a low contribution per unit of scarce resource to those carrying a higher contribution.

Clearly, wherever a company is operating in conditions where there is any limitation on output other than the volume that can be sold, then the contribution/sales ratio must give way to the ranking by contribution per facility unit.

Cost control is important in maximizing profits, but it is equally important not to lose sight of the fact that due attention directed to a rational selling/price strategy for the business may produce a greater influence upon profit, and unless management has an understanding of the nature of costs and their relation to selling policy, it will be largely fighting the competitive battle with one hand tied behind its back.

Consolidated Accounts – a Simple Technique

by LEON KRITZINGER, C.A.(S.A.),

Professor of Accountancy, University of Port Elizabeth, South Africa

STUDENTS of accounting the world over – and indeed not only students – seem to experience considerable difficulty with the preparation of consolidated accounts. The general opinion seems to be that the preparation of consolidated accounts is based on some kind of gimmick devised by sinister accountancy teachers – or examiners – to make them fail the examinations. The reason for this attitude can be found, I think, in the obscure 'black magic' methods that are being used to explain what is really a simple extension of double-entry book-keeping.

Over slightly longer than the past decade I have developed a method of explaining the records to be kept by holding companies and the adjustments flowing from the holding company/subsidiary company relationship. This article deals with the basic approach which is followed in lectures on this subject at the University of Port Elizabeth.

As, however, the article is not intended to deal with the historical background of the holding company/subsidiary company relationship or the legislation peculiar to their own countries, readers should do some background reading covering, inter alia, the reasons for buying the assets as represented by the shares rather than the individual assets of the subsidiary; the legal definitions of subsidiary and holding companies; when consolidated accounts are required by law, and other general aspects.

Methods similar for branch or subsidiary

There is very little difference between the method of merging (consolidating) the two sets of books kept by a trading concern operating with one branch, and the method used to consolidate the accounts of a holding company and a wholly-owned subsidiary company. It is as well to review the system of branch accounts at this stage. Particular attention should be paid to the interrelationship between the two separate trial balances; to the method of merging the two trial balances; to the preparation of a combined trading and profit and loss account and balance sheet; and to the make-up of the various items. Also to adjustments in respect of unrealized profit on stock in cases where goods are invoiced to the branch at cost plus a mark-up. Note how the two trial balances are merged by means of pro forma journal entries.

This article is based on a paper presented at the Second International Conference on Accounting Education held in London last September.

Then consider a situation where the head office buys a business from an outsider and decides to maintain all the records of the business as if it were a new branch. For the sake of simplicity all superfluous detail has been eliminated.

Example 1

Head office takes over the business of Mr X, a sole trader, for cash and bases the purchase consideration on a valuation of the only asset to be acquired. The trial balance of Mr X's business at the date of acquisition is as follows:

Capital, Mr X	 	£10,000
Land and buildings - at cost	 £10,000

The value of the land and buildings in this case will obviously determine the purchase consideration. Assume the purchase consideration (or value placed on the land and buildings) to be: (i) £10,000; (ii) £15,000; or (iii) £8,000.

The head office will in all three cases part with the cash and debit the amount to branch account. The branch in turn, will transfer the capital account to head office account. In case (i) there is no problem. In case (ii), however, there will be a difference of $\pounds_{5,000}$ between the head office account and the branch account. If we now assume that for various reasons the branch is not prepared to change the book value of the asset, an analysis of the branch account — setting out the reason why there is a difference between the head office and the branch account — will solve the problem.

To analyse the branch account the following method is suggested:

Branch Account

Difference in value – land and buildings	Head office account	Total
£5,000	£10.000	£15.000

The pro forma journal entry to merge the two trial balances will be:

Head office account	,	٠.	£,10,000
-Difference in value - lan	d and buildings		5,000
Branch account				£15,000

The difference in value – land and buildings, together with the figure for land and buildings in the branch trial balance, will be shown in the combined head office and branch balance sheet as 'land and buildings at cost £15,000'. The rationale is perfectly clear: the head office, which owns the branch, paid £15,000 for the land and buildings which must, therefore, be shown at cost.

Branch Account

Difference in value – land and buildings	Head office account	Total
£,2,000	£,10,000	£8,000

The pro forma journal entry being:

The difference in value – land and buildings, is now deducted from the figure appearing in the branch trial balance to arrive at the merged figure of £8,000. This again represents cost of land and buildings to the head office.

The concept of paying more for the branch than the net asset value in order to gain 'control', or because an intangible asset (e.g. goodwill) has not been recorded in the books, can now be dealt with. The same technique of analysing the branch account is followed. Again, the reason why more was paid will be recorded.

Example 2

Head office buys a business for £25,000. The book value of the tangible assets fairly reflects their true values. The trial balance at the date of purchase is:

Capital owner	• •				_	€20,000
Sundry assets		• •	• •	• •	£,20,000

The difference between the purchase price and the net asset value, viz. £5,000 can, therefore, only arise because of super profits or the desire to gain control. At this stage the distinction between cost of control and goodwill is academic and of no consequence. Assume that it is due to the expected super profits. The explanation is therefore that it is goodwill. The branch account is analysed as follows:

Branch Account

Goodwill	Head office account	Total
£ 000	£30,000	(25,000

The pro forma journal entry to merge the two trial balances is:

Goodwill	• •		••,		£5,0∞
Head office			* * _{1:45}		20,000
Branch account	• *•	• •	• •	••		£25,000

There is no limitation on the number of analysis columns that the branch account may accommodate. It is possible, for example, to include changes in the value of assets in an upward and downward direction combined with goodwill. The principle remains unchanged. The analysis columns provide the make-up for the credit to the branch account.

The analysis of the investment account in the case of a holding company with a wholly-owned subsidiary follows exactly the same pattern as the analysis of the branch account in the head office/branch relationship. The holding company is, ir. effect, buying the assets of the subsidiary, the right and title to the assets being the shares. The connecting link between the holding company and the subsidiary company is the investment account in the books of the holding company and the shareholders' interest in the subsidiary's books.

Example 3

H Ltd bought all the shares in S Ltd on January 1st, 1967, for £85,000. The purchase price of the shares was based on the tangible assets which were considered to be worth their respective book values. The trial balance at the date of acquisition of the shares was as follows:

Capital - authorized, iss	ued and	d fully	paid	£,50,000
General reserve			-	15,000
Appropriation account		••	• •	20,000
Sundry fixed assets			£,60,000	of Arthur
Sundry current assets			25,000	• • • • • • •
,			£85,000	£85,000

As the purchase price is equal to the shareholders' interest (capital, general reserve and appropriation account) the investment account in H Ltd's books will agree with the shareholders' interest in the books of the subsidiary, S Ltd (compare this with the head office/branch relationship). The 'investment account — S Ltd' will now be analysed in the same way as the branch account was analysed, except that instead of having one account (i.e. head office account in the branch books), three accounts, viz. capital £50,000, general reserve £15,000 and appropriation account £20,000 make up the 'head office' account. There is no limitation on the number of columns into which the investment account may be analysed, and the total paid is analysed as follows:

Investment Account - S Ltd

Appropriation account	General reserve	Capital	Total
£,20,000	£,15,000	£50,000	€,85,000

The preparation of a consolidated balance sheet at the date of acquisition will require only one pro forma journal entry which will eliminate the 'investment account — S Ltd' and the shareholders' interest. This again can be obtained from the investment account ('branch account') as follows:

Capital – S Ltd	 	£50,000	• ,
General reserve - S Ltd	 	15,000
Appropriation account – S Ltd	 	` 20,000
Investment account – S Ltd	 	_	£85,000

The analysis columns of the investment account will again provide the details for the entry which will eliminate the investment account and the shareholders' interest.

Assume now that the purchase price of the shares in Example 3 was £100,000 and that all the assets were considered to be worth their respective book values. The difference between the shareholders' interest and the investment account, viz. £15,000 in this case must again be ascribed to 'goodwill'. The investment account will then be analysed as follows:

Investment Account - S Ltd

Goodwill	Appropriation account	General reserve	Capital	Total
£15,000	£20,000	£15,000	£50,000 _	£100,000 and the pro forma journal entry will be

Goodwill		 	£15,000

General rese		 	15,000
Capital - S	Ltd:	 	50,000
Investmen	it account - S Ltd

£100,000

Where the assets were valued differently from their book values – either above or below in order to arrive at the purchase consideration of the shares, more columns are added to the investment account. Assume that in Example 3, it was considered that plant was overvalued by £2,000 and debtors by £1,000, that motor vehicles were undervalued by £1,500, but that the remaining assets were fairly valued in the books of the subsidiary and that the purchase consideration was £90,000. The analysis of the investment account will be as shown above, and the pro forma journal entry on consolidation is as follows:

Capital – S Ltd		 	£50,000
General reserve - S Ltd		 	15,000
Appropriation account -	S Ltd	 	20,000	•
Plant - S Ltd	• •	 		£,2,000
Debtors - S Ltd		 • •		1,000
Motor vehicles - S Ltd		 	1,500
Goodwill		 	6,500
Investment account - S	S Ltd	 	90,000

The analysis columns of the investment account again provide the details for the pro forma journal entry on consolidation.

As can be seen from the foregoing this method of analysing the investment account is very easy, it explains the breakdown of the purchase price, and it is highly flexible.

One further problem needs to be solved. The subsidiary company will earn profits or incur losses from the date of acquisition up to some undeterminable future date. Because of the fact that the combined economic activity of the branch/head office relationship is also that of one business entity, the profit made or loss incurred is dealt with as an integral part of the financial records and is consequently recorded as part of the double entry in both sets of books. The economic activity of the two separate business entities in the holding company/subsidiary company relationship is, however, only combined for the preparation of consolidated accounts. Under normal circumstances the profit/loss will not be dealt with in the holding company's books as part of the double entry. In the case of the head office/branch relationship a combined set of accounts will not be attempted unless the two accounts which establish the link agree.

Why then should a consolidation of company accounts be attempted without first reconciling the investment account and the shareholders' interest of the subsidiary company? This can be achieved by the introduction of a memorandum column in the investment account. The profit earned by a subsidiary company since the date of acquisition of the shares is recorded, though it is purely a memorandum at this stage. It does, however, solve the problem of effecting a reconciliation between the investment account and the shareholders' interest, prior to the preparation of consolidated accounts.

Memorandum account

The mechanics of the memorandum account are very elementary. Bearing in mind the fact that the profit/loss of the subsidiary will form part of the double entry in its books, all that is done, really, is to complete the link between the holding company and subsidiary company by means of a memorandum column.

Example 4

H Ltd subscribed for and was allotted all the shares in S Ltd on January 1st, 1963. S Ltd's appropriation account for the years ended December 31st, 1963, 1964, 1965 and 1966 in summarized form is as follows:

Appropriation Account

1963 Dec. 31st	Profit	and l	Loss	£3,000

1966 Dec. 31st	,,	"	,,	2,000
				f.14,000

S Ltd's authorized, issued and paid capital consists of 20,000 shares of £1 each. The analysis of the investment account is as follows:

Investment Account - S Ltd

Memo	1963 Jan. 1st	Bank	Capital £20,000	Total £20,000

£,14,000

The shareholders' interest in S Ltd at the end of each financial year will be in agreement with the investment account plus the balance of the memo column. The pro forma journal entries on consolidation are obtained from the investment account and are as follows:

Entry 1	•	•.

				12,000

Entry I is obviously repetitive because all the entries are pro forma and are not, therefore, put through in any set of books but merely to consolidate the books of the holding and subsidiary companies.

Logically, the next step is to explain the treatment of dividends received by the holding company declared out of profit earned by the subsidiary company. Assume now that in the Example 4 above, S Ltd declared and paid the following dividends during the years concerned debiting its appropriation account:

Dec. 1963 ... £1,000
Dec. 1964 ... £2,000
Dec. 1965 ... £2,000
Dec. 1966 ... £2,000

As the principle is to keep the investment account in line with the shareholders' interest in the subsidiary company, the memo account will be reduced by the amount of the dividend received by the holding company (and declared by the subsidiary company). Observe that the maximum amount which S Ltd can declare by way of dividend is recorded in the memo account. The memo column in the investment account will appear as follows:

Investment Account - S Ltd

Entry 1 is repeated each year and the other entries for the years ended December 1965 and December 1966 follow the same pattern.

In cases where the holding company buys shares in an existing company, the problem which normally arises is whether a dividend received by the holding company is revenue or a return of capital or partly revenue and partly capital. If the investment account is analysed as suggested, the problem can be dealt with in a logical way.

Example 5

H. Ltd bought all the shares in S Ltd on January 1st, 1963, for £50,000. All the assets were considered to be worth their respective book values. The shareholders' interest at the date of acquisition consisted of:

S Ltd's appropriation account in summarized form for the years to December 31st, 1966, is as follows:

*Assume profit was earned evenly throughout the year.

A lot has been written on this problem from a legal point of view. With due respect, all dividends, whether out of pre- or post-acquisition profits may be legally distributable but there is no accounting justification for this viewpoint.

The maximum amount of dividends received or declared which the holding company may safely credit to its profit and loss account is the amount recorded in the memo column of the investment account. The reason for this is as follows:

Assume that H Ltd was formed merely to hold the shares in S Ltd; further, that the whole of the dividends dealt with in entries (1) and (2) had been credited to profit and loss account, the dividends paid in S Ltd's books would then be contraed with dividends received in H Ltd's books. The appropriation account column in the analysis would be debited to appropriation account to eliminate part of the investment account. Because of the dividend declared this account would leave a debit of £5,000. Unless the consolidated figures are obtained by ignoring all recognized principles this debit will remain. Even if a method is found to prepare a consolidation, what can this debit be called – 'Dividend paid by subsidiary'?

To revert to the recommended treatment - the modus operandi for recording the dividends received is as follows:

On receipt of a dividend by the holding company the profit earned by the subsidiary is recorded up in the memorandum column to the same date. The amount by which the dividend exceeds the amount recorded will represent a return of capital. Entry (1) above was arrived at on this basis. The amount of the dividend (£4,000) is compared with the memo column (Nil). The dividend is, therefore, a return of capital. Entry (2) is arrived at in a similar way. The profit earned by S Ltd to December 31st, 1963 (the date of the dividend) is recorded in the memo column. On receipt of the dividend, the amount thereof is compared with the total recorded in the memo. The dividend exceeds the memo column by £1,000. Consequently this amount is return of capital. Entries (3) and (4) present no problem. With entries (5) and (6) an important principle is at stake, namely: must the profits earned and the dividends declared by a subsidiary company be considered as a whole over a financial year; or can they be dealt with over shorter periods? Very little (if anything at all) has been written about this, and my own view is that they should be considered as a whole over a financial year. Different answers could result if they were considered over a shorter period. For example, in the above investment account (see entry (5)), the credit to the investment would fall away as the amount recorded in the memo column at the end of that year would be equal to the dividends received for the year.

There is nothing to prevent a holding company from writing up the investment account by the amount of the profit earned less the dividends declared by the subsidiary since the date of acquisition, as long as the principle concerning the revaluation of assets is adhered to, viz. that the amount by which the asset is written up must be credited to a capital reserve as it is unrealized. All that this really means is that all entries in the memo column in the investment account will be the subject of a double entry in the books of the holding company. The entries to record the amounts in the memo column in Example 5 are as follows:

Entry 1 Dec. 1963	S Ltd accrued profits Profits earned by S Ltd	£3,000	£3,000

I.C.W.A. Memorandum to the Chancellor

The Council of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants has submitted to the Chancellor of the Exchequer the following memorandum of views and recommendations on the Budget for 1968 and on longer-term measures.

N general the Council believes that the following matters are of particular importance:

- Wasteful and cumbersome procedures resulting from recent legislation should be identified, examined and streamlined in the interests of national efficiency.
- (2) Adequate incentives should be provided for industry which should be directed to stimulating exports, reducing non-essential imports and improving efficiency.
- (3) The downward trend of industrial profitability in relation to capital employed, now at its lowest ebb for over a decade, presents an unhealthy economic situation. It is likely to have an adverse effect on investment in industry and should be reversed.
- (4) Greater corporate and individual efforts to improve industrial productivity should be encouraged by the provision of stronger incentives.

Burden of non-productive administration

The volume of hastily prepared legislation in recent years has resulted in a serious diversion of the time and energy of senior management and accountants from their main task of improving industrial efficiency. Some of the more important items of this legislation are:

Finance Acts 1965, 1966 and 1967; Selective Employment Act 1966; Prices and Incomes Act 1966; Redundancy Payments Act 1965; Industrial Development Act 1966; Companies Act 1967; Industrial Training Act 1964; Lands Commission Act 1967.

In addition a growing volume of statistical returns is being sought from industry, involving valuable man-hours of work. Further difficulties occur where several Government departments are concerned each having different interpretations.

The Council feels most strongly that the Government should take urgent action to reduce this diversion of talent and energy from the primary task of increasing productivity. The Council urges that as a matter of priority a special investigation be carried out by the Government with the assistance of industry and the appropriate professional bodies with the aim of rationalizing and simplifying legislation to reduce the demands made on industry by Government departments.

Stimulation of exports

All ways and means of providing real incentives to exporting industries should be investigated as quickly as possible. For example, joint consultations should take place between the Government, industry and the City on this problem.

It is recommended that export rebates due to be terminated on March 31st, 1968, should be reinstated so that no break occurs in the application of the scheme.

Incentives for capital expenditure

The scheme for investment grants has an inherent weakness in that it frequently involves much detailed administrative work to satisfy the requirements of the Board of Trade. For example, the administrative procedure involves:

- (1) double certification of the expenditure by the applicant and an independent accountant with further written confirmation from the latter that he has in fact signed the application;
- (2) very detailed record keeping and notification of changes in the location of assets, coupled with visits to site by Board of Trade officials to determine whether or not a particular asset is used in a qualifying process and qualifies for a grant.

The system of statute law and case law which applies in respect of capital expenditure for tax purposes works quite satisfactorily but arbitrary decisions being made by the Board of Trade which depart from this system are causing confusion in relation to investment grants and in records.

The system of investment allowances may have been too indiscriminate, but it is considered that it could have been modified satisfactorily in relatively simple ways and would have been less costly to administer than the present system. The selective system could still have been applied, although preferably on a broader basis. An alternative method of paying the equivalent value of the allowance could have been introduced to cover cases where the benefit would otherwise have been delayed pending the making of profits.

It is recommended that the system of providing incentives for capital expenditure be reviewed in detail with the objects of reducing the burden of administration, removing anomalies and providing for statute and case law to be applied consistently.

Grants for industrial buildings

Industrial buildings of the most suitable design are an essential part of efficient manufacturing processes. Many companies, however, continue in unsuitable premises. The principle of making grants for industrial buildings is already accepted in certain cases in development areas. It is recommended that as part of the process of encouraging the modernization of industry, investment grants should be payable in respect of industrial buildings generally with a higher rate for development areas.

Selective employment tax

There would appear to be no justification for the continuance of this tax in which there are anomalies, ambiguities and difficulties of interpretation.

Large sums of money which would otherwise have been available for industrial expansion and the improvement of efficiency have been diverted to Government use.

Now that selective employment premiums have been withdrawn from manufacturing industry, the process of payment and refund no longer serves any logical purpose. On the contrary it is an added administrative burden imposed on industry.

The selective employment tax has not resulted in any significant diversion of labour from service industries to manufacturing.

It is recommended that the selective employment tax be abolished.

Capital allowances for tax purposes

Need for recognition of the effect of inflation

The Council reiterates the view which it emphasized in paragraph 8 of its submission to the Chancellor dated March 12th, 1965, namely:

'The Council considers that taxation legislation which recognizes the existence of inflation as a serious economic fact is long overdue.

'With regard to business assets eligible for capital allowances, it should be a fundamental principle for taxation purposes that the costs chargeable against income derived therefrom should be in the same real monetary terms. Even a contained rate of continuous inflation, such as appears inevitable in a modern economy, operates against this basic principle.

'Under conditions of inflation, the fact that capital allowances are based on historic cost and spread over the life of capital assets results in a progressive diminution of the real value of such capital allowances in years subsequent to the year of purchase. In fact, true costs are thus never allowed in full for taxation purposes, and the longer the life of an asset the more serious this position becomes.

The Council requests that capital allowances should be adjusted by price indices so that the true cost as adjusted for inflation be allowed against business profits over the life of an asset.'

Offices, showrooms and other premises

O.fices, showrooms and other premises which are essential for the operation of a business are as much a part of the enterprise as its industrial buildings. It is recommended that they should be eligible for allowances in the same way as industrial buildings.

Corporation tax

Relief for capital losses

As capital gains and trading profits are charged to corporation tax at the same rate, relief for capital losses should be allowed against trading profits in the same way that trading losses can be set off against capital gains.

Section 61 of the Finance Act 1965 permits trading losses to be carried forward where there is a company reconstruction without change of ownership but it does not provide for capital losses to be carried forward. Group relief as provided by section 20 of the Finance Act 1967 does not allow capital losses to be set off against the profits of another company. These restrictions appear to be illogical and lead to the continuation of company activities beyond their usefulness merely to maintain the existence of agreed capital losses.

It is recommended that to assist industry these aspects of corporation tax should be rationalized.

Close company regulations

A large proportion of the working population is employed in small- and medium-sized companies. The management and the development of these companies is important to the economy. Many of these companies are covered by close company regulations which are complex and restrictive. Restrictions on retained profits and on directors' remuneration do not encourage development.

It is recommended that:

- (1) the limits on the remuneration of actively engaged directors be eased to provide greater incentives;
- (2) shortfall assessments should not be imposed merely because the appropriate dividend is not paid within twelve months of the accountancy date.

Relief in respect of 'know-how'

It is considered that relief should be available for lump-sum payments for the acquisition of 'know-how' either by way of capital allowances or as revenue write off, at taxpayer's option.

Capital gains tax

As in the case of corporation tax, it is considered that the capital gains tax should be more closely related to the realities of the economy. No distinction is made between gains which result from a real increase in value and apparent gains produced by inflation.

The inclusion of minor cases in short- or long-term capital gains probably increases the cost of administration beyond the value of the tax recovered.

It is recommended that steps be taken to eliminate the charging of capital gains tax on that part of capital gains due to inflation and also to eliminate the need for assessment in minor cases.

P11D Regulations

The limit of £2,000 for purposes of PIID which was introduced many years ago is now unrealistic in relation to present day salary levels. It is recommended that the limit should be raised to at least £4,000 in order to eliminate many cases where the tax collectable is less than the cost of the administrative burden falling on industry and the Inland Revenue.

Business entertainment expenses

The prohibition on entertainment expenses appears to be punishing the majority for the sins of a minority. It is recommended that the eligibility of such expenses for deduction from profits and personal income should be judged according to whether or not they are properly incurred for business purposes.

Expenses deductible under Schedule E

It is recommended that the same rules as apply under Schedule D should be applied in defining expenses deductible under Schedule E, as was recommended by the Royal Commission on the Taxation of Profits and Incomes.

Reviews

Management Information and Systems

by A. G. DONALD

Pergamon Press Ltd, Oxford. 30s (paper back 21s).

There are many pressures on a businessman or industrialist today. Not only are there the day-to-day problems connected with his work but in addition, if he is to survive, he must keep up with new management thought. His rivals are aware of the new techniques, so in today's competitive situation he too must learn them.

Until recently, textbooks tended to concentrate primarily on one technique or, at least, on a group of related techniques. Treatises, volumes and pamphlets on subjects such as critical path analysis, statistical techniques, games theory, management organization and structure, symbolic logic and computer theory, control systems, management information techniques and so on, have flooded the market.

The greater the number and diversity of the new techniques, the more difficult it has been for the non-specialist reader to keep up with current thinking on these subjects, and the need for books which could give a more general picture has long been obvious. This Mr Donald has sought to do.

Some detail has necessarily had to be sacrificed in order to compress the material into a reasonable space (some one hundred and sixty-nine pages in all), but there is the added merit that the author has covered all the material himself and consequently the overall approach has the merit of consistency. The book should prove of considerable value to those attending short courses in management, as well as to fultime students of management at universities and technical colleges.

Corporate Taxation in the Common Market

International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation, Amsterdam. £,12 12s.

This is volume two in the useful series of guides to European taxation published by the International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation. Like the first which was devoted to The Taxation of Patent Royalties, Dividends and Interest in Europe, this second volume is in handy loose-leaf form with durable black covers. For ease of reference there are flagged dividers in different colours, a blue one for each country of the Common Market. Each country has a separate chapter (that for France is in course of being brought up to date); these are preceded by an introduction which sets out some general definitions.

Part 2 of the volume deals with differences in corporate taxation among the member countries of the E.E.C., and with the problems of harmonization. Part 3 covers the fiscal provisions of the European Integration Treaties (Benelux, European Coal and Steel Community, and European Economic Community). Part 4 deals with the present international tax law in the E.E.C. countries and its influence on harmonization. An index is to be provided in due course.

Mustoe on Close Companies

Second Edition, by N. E. Mustoe, Q.C., M.A., LL.B.

Butterworth & Co (Publishers) Ltd, London. 50s combined price, main work and supplement.

In this second edition Mr Mustoe has extended his book from 267 to 346 pages, bringing in the Finance Act 1966 and experience of the operation of the law during the eighteen months following the passing of the Finance Act 1965. A large number of practical examples have been introduced increasing the original sixteen to sixty-four. Fuller treatment is now given of overspill relief, and of double taxation and the restriction of directors' remuneration. The relevant legislation is reproduced in appendices.

The choice of topics dealt with is in some cases a little curious. Over four pages are devoted to the exemption from capital gains tax of an individual who sells his residence a topic which does not seem to have a close connection with close companies. On the other hand, the highly important provisions in Schedule 13 of the Finance Act 1965, dealing with groups of companies are dismissed in a very few words. Part I of the schedule is summed up by the following

The leading principle of that Part is that inter-group [intra-group?] transfers do not attract capital gains tax.'

The book does not say what constitutes a group and does not reproduce Schedule 13 itself. Brevity is, of course, essential in a book of this nature but it can sometimes be at the expense of accuracy, as the following sentence on the question of 'controlling interests' shows:

'If at the material time a casting vote is in fact exercisable by a non-director-chairman, the company is not nondirector controlled: Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Monick Ltd.'

Guide to Corporation Tax

Clarmac Publications Ltd, Harrow, Middx. 25s.

Any mixed party of tax experts, company officials and business freshmen on their way back from a three-year inter-planetary voyage should be supplied with this tax digest on re-entry. By splash-down time they will have a working knowledge of corporation tax, neatly slotted in with their previous experience. The fifty-eight examples blend in with the very readable text, while continued use as a working tool is facilitated by a forty-subject contents backed by a ninety-subject index, mostly with several page references.

Money and Banking by Reay Tolfree, a.c.i.s., a.i.b., f.r.econ.s. Allman & Son Ltd, London. 7s 6d.

Modern Banking

Clarendon Press: Oxford University Press, London. Hard cover 35s. Paper cover 17s 6d.

Mr Tolfree defines his audience as first-year sixth formers with A-level economics in view. Professor Sayers's classic is 'addressed primarily to the university student who wishes to include in his honours course a study of banking sufficient to enable him to understand how this important part of the economic system really works nowadays'. Readers outside these two different groups who yet want to know more about money than how to spend it, can approach the subject with the aid of the first book and go deeper with the second.

The basic concept of money is an eminently simple one, but monetary economics is for most people a bewildering confusion. Mr Tolfree's slight book - a mere sixty-eight pages - is extraordinarily successful in bringing light into the dark places. It begins at the very beginning - barter and takes the reader carefully through the characteristics of money, the banking mechanism, the money market, the national income and international transactions, to a final chapter in which monetary policy itself seems comprehensible.

Within so small a compass, obviously only the essential points can be made; the merit of the book lies largely in the choice of essentials in this context, and their linking to make layman's sense. By the same token the reader needs to concentrate; it would be no compliment to suggest that here is light fireside reading. But the complicated story is blessedly free from jargon; and each chapter has an admirable reading list for those who want to go further.

Inevitably Modern Banking is one of the books there listed; in the thirty years since the first edition appeared its quality has become too well known for there to be any need here to discuss its formidable merits. The most important addition to this new edition is a twelve-page addendum on recent changes in the London Money Market, including the multiplication of markets within the market. The discount market that used to be the only one has now alongside it the Euro-dollar market, the local authorities market and the inter-bank market. Their development, and their interaction amongst themselves, are described; even readers superficially familiar with the subject may be surprised to be reminded how recently the changes have taken place and how significant they are.

Change, of course, continues and accelerates. The facts in this edition 'may now be assumed to relate to the latter part of 1966'; the Post Office giro and the bank giro have since then altered the mechanical facts, or promise to do so, and devaluation has cast its long shadow over the whole subject. It is a melancholy thought that monetary economics is now more topical than ever, and these two books - at their different levels of attack - are correspondingly more valuable.

Finance and Commerce

In Nigeria

WITH nearly 60 per cent of its gross assets, at book values, in Nigeria and the bulk of its business there, John Holt & Company (Liverpool) Ltd has inevitably been affected by the civil war in that country. The company's detailed and informative report and accounts – the accounts being presented in 1967 Companies Act style – cover the financial year to last August and since that period the Biafran forces have advanced deeply into Nigerian Government territory and have subsequently been pushed back again. The self-styled Biafran State is at present under economic blockade.

Of Holt's 1966-67 turnover of £31.3 million in Nigeria, £23.4 million was in general merchandise and produce merchanting, a further £4.7 million in motor dealing and engineering, £1.2 million in river transport, shipping and forwarding, £920,000 in manufacturing companies and £1,043,000 in export agency businesses. Overall turnover was down £2 million, but Nigerian profits fell from £761,000 to £83,000.

General investment income was £5,000 up at £74,000 and profits from the group's considerable turnover in wine and spirit shipping wholesales and retailing (turnover more than £11 million) were back from £448,000 to £172,000, although the 1965-66 figure, it should be pointed out, included seventeen months' trading for substantial United Kingdom wine interests acquired in that year.

Finance and group central administration charges were £684,000 against £659,000, leaving a group loss of £355,000 against a previous year profit of £619,000, with ordinary dividend reduced from 17½ per cent to 7 per cent.

Provision for losses

As Note 9 to the accounts shows, £836,000 has been provided for losses and damage sustained in Nigeria and, if Nigeria were not enough, £142,893 of losses were sustained by 30 per cent devaluation in Ghana where, as Note 8 shows, $f_{3,141,723}$ is effectively blocked by finance restrictions imposed by the Ghana Government.

Of the £836,000, a figure of £700,000 covers the book value of assets in the Eastern part of Nigeria (Biafra) and for liabilities there which may not be recovered from third parties, and the balance of £136,000 has been similarly provided against damage sustained elsewhere in Nigeria. The auditors in their report state: 'Due to the disturbances in Eastern Nigeria certain information and returns have not been received and we have been unable to verify the existence of the assets referred to in Note 10'. This column begs to doubt whether 'disturbance' is the correct word, but that is a matter of opinion.

The Biafran advance into the West of Nigeria overran Holt's centres in Warri and Benin but the company is back in both places now. Traffic on the River Niger is still impossible and the river transport fleet is idle. The East (Biafra) is still blockaded and there has been no contact with the business there for several months.

An inevitable consequence of the civil war was severe restriction on credit with resultant run down in trade and profits even in those areas where business was possible.

Reorganization

Troubles never come alone and the war in Nigeria started at a time when the company was still in the throes of a major administrative reorganization. Mr P. B. Hunter, in his first statement as chairman, says 'hard decisions have had to be taken, old friends have had to leave, new methods have had to be imposed and reluctance to abandon long established practices has had to be surmounted'.

But in twelve months the group in the United Kingdom has, by reductions in staff, office space and other overheads, not only absorbed rising costs and selective employment tax (£44,000 a year) but also reduced the burden of overheads by some 10 per cent. The accounts, Mr Hunter stresses, do not reflect a full year's operation of any of the economy measures and, in addition, they include the redundancy payments the company has had to make.

Even if the Nigerian position is not resolved, a small

4 CURRENT ASSETS

In conformity with past practice, all unused maintenance stores and outstanding claims for losses, etc., of the Parent Company and certain subsidiaries which have not been met at the close of the period have been charged against trading profits.

The Company has the option to redeem all, or any, of the First Cumulative Preference Shares after 15th October, 1965, the final redemption date being 15th October,

For the purposes of the foregoing provisions the prices at which the Company shall be entitled to redeem the First Preference Shares shall be:--

On the 16th October, 1965 and the eafter up to and including the 15th October, 1975 at twenty-one shillings per share.
On the 16th October, 1975 and thereafter up to and including the 15th October, 1985 at twenty shillings and sixpence per share and thereafter at par-

The Company shall also be entitled from time to time after the 15th October, 1965, to redeem any of the First Preference Shares for the time being outstanding by purchase in the open market or by tender or private contract at any price (inclusive of expenses of purchase but exclusive of accrued dividend) not exceeding the then current redemption price.

An interest-free loan has been granted to a Subsidiary Company for capital construction, repayable in five equal annual instalments of £60,000 each, the first instalment repayment date being the 21st February, 1969. This may be subject to certain relieving provisions.

7 LIABILITIES UNDER GUARANTEE

(a) The Parent Company has guaranteed certain facilities for subsidiary companies amounting to:-

- (b) The Parent Company has entered into guarantees in respect of Pension Schemes instituted by it.
- There are contingent liabilities in respect of:—
 (i) Uncalled capital on investments held by the Parent Company of £62,000 and of £720,000 on account of uncalled capital of subsidiary companies.
- (ii) Bills discounted by subsidiary companies amounting to £23,708 (1966 £10,596).

profit is anticipated in 1967-68 with 'worth-while improvement' looked for in following years. Shareholders are told that 'in the results coming in for the current year, there are encouraging signs of improvement'.

Devaluation

The programme of management reorganization was directed particularly to the group's wine trade interests which cover John Holt Wines, Grierson, Oldham & Adams,

J. L. P. Lebegue & Co, among others in this country, and Louis Eschenauer and Holt Frères et Fils in France. In the year under review, retail business improved 12 per cent and profits 'were well maintained' but both turnover and profits dropped significantly on the wholesale side.

Although during the current year sales of existing wine stocks bought with undevalued pounds have been stimulated, replacement of stocks will be much more costly and prices already hit by competition, must rise. Since the

Due to the present stringent finance restrictions imposed in Ghana at the date of these Accounts it is not possible for profits otherwise available for distribution to be remitted from that country. Until these restrictions are lifted an amount of £141,723 of the reserves is not available for remittance to the United Kingdom.

During the year the Ghana Cedi was devalued by 30% and the total loss to the Group arising therefrom is as shown in the Reserves (Note 9).

10 PROVISION FOR LOSSES AND DAMAGES SUSTAINED IN NIGERIA

Full provision has been made, by transfer from Reserves, for the book value of assets in the Eastern part of Nigeria and for liabilities there which may not be recovered from third parties, both as at the latest date for which information is available and totalling £700,000. A provision of £136,000 has been similarly made in respect of damage sustained elsewhere in Nigeria.

11 DEPRECIATION OF FIXED ASSETS

All fixed assets are depreciated at a rate applied to the original cost or to the valuation shown in Note 1. In general the following rates have been used:

Freehold Land Freehold Buildings in Nil. minimum 2%, but 3% used on majority of buildings in West Africa. Written off within tenure under lease with minimum as for freeholds.

Craft, Plant, Vehicles, etc. at such a rate as will ensure the particular asset is written off by the close of its estimated working life.

Furnishings and Office Equipment rates vary between 7½% and 20% according to location and other conditions.

Furniture and Office Equipment of the Parent Company and of one of its principal subsidiary companies are dealt with on a replacement basis, such replacements being a charge against profits. There is, therefore, no charge against profits for depreciation on such assets. Certain assets of a French subsidiary company have been dealt with on a replacement basis to take advantage of French Tax legislation.

12 TAXATION

Full advantage has been taken of the Group Relief provisions for Corporation Tax allowed by the 1967 Finance Act. The United Kingdom liability has been settled with the Inland Revenue to the close of the accounting period ended 31st August, 1964. The overseas tax charge arises from profits of foreign subsidiaries and minimum taxes based on turnover.

13 EXCHANGE CONVERSION RATES

Currency values for current assets in the Balance Sheet of the Parent Company, and in the Consolidated Balance Sheet, for 1967 have been taken at:—

Australian Currency		$	2.50=£1
Nigerian Currency	•		£N1 =£1
Ghanaian Currency		New Cedis	2.857 = £1
Francs (West Africa)		CFA.	691 =£1
Francs (France)		Fcs.	13.82 =£1

14 LOANS TO OFFICERS

At 31st August, 1967 there was £2,300 (1966 – £3,540) outstanding under this heading for advances made by the Parent Company.

Time to revaluate insurance – and Save and Prosper's INSURANCE UNITS

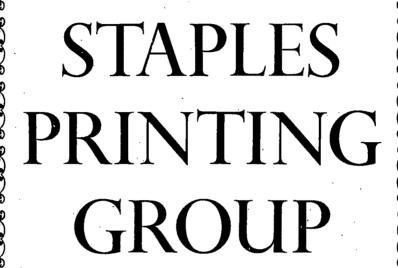

Devaluation is likely to benefit the insurance industry. For example, premium income from overseas fire and accident business will rise in terms of the £. A high proportion of brokers' commissions are earned overseas, while their main expenses are met in the U.K. In addition, many major composite offices are forecasting higher dividends. Life offices continue to prosper and preliminary figures published for 1967 show sums assured up by 12% on the previous year.

Save and Prosper's Insurance Units offer a carefully-selected spread over all important sectors of the industry. On 19th February their offer price stood at 9s. 3½d., giving an estimated gross starting yield of £2 15s. 6d.% per annum. Naturally the price of units and the income from them can go down as well as up, but professional investors should consider whether the price of insurance shares and of Insurance Units are not due for serious revaluation—upwards.

company's business in France is expanding more rapidly with other parts of the world than with the United Kingdom, devaluation is not expected to have any appreciable adverse effect on profit growth in the French business.

Sterling devaluation, however, has complicated the situation in West Africa where neither the Nigerian pound nor the Ghana cedi were devalued in parallel. For many commodity merchants who had bought produce forward in terms of local currency and sold in terms of sterling, this has had serious consequences but Holts have not done business as commodity dealers for some years. Devaluation of sterling since the end of the financial year under review will reduce the loss suffered by devaluation of the Ghana cedi during the financial year covered by the accounts.

CITY NOTES

As the late 1966 and early 1967 equity buyers come out of the short-term gains tax zone the equity market becomes more prone to pre-Budget selling pressure. In index terms the market has dropped to the 400 mark or just below it and there is some present discussion as to just how far the drop will go.

By some process known only to those intimately connected with slide-rule calculations, a magic figure of 385 for The Financial Times Index has been produced as the likely nadir of any pre- or even post-Budget price fall. Exactly how 385 is arrived at is more than a little obscure.

But it is safe to say that the market is now firmly in a new index bracket and that a drop to 350 in the index could now be considered almost in slump terms. There is so much investment faith, and so much investment money, placed in equities that even the shallowest of shake-outs is regarded as the sure signal for renewed buying.

It will take something more than a tough Budget to shake equity investors out of the market on any scale and, since it is difficult to see any other 'bear' factor than a tough Budget in the immediate future, the view that any setback will prove shallow – as shallow as 385 for The Financial Times Index – seems to be a reasonable one to take.

ACQUISITION of Lambert Brothers by Hill Samuel adds a new dimension to the Hill Samuel merchant and investment banking organization. Some 60 per cent of Lambert Brothers' earnings come from insurance and insurance broking and the company owns 51 per cent of London and Overseas Insurance. Hill Samuel have had a man on the Lambert Brothers board for some time and have held a minor equity stake in the company.

But the all-out acquisition is another move in the regrouping of interests that is going on in the City just as it is going on in industry. Midland Bank's close connection with Samuel Montagu is an obvious example of this trend and, once the joint-stock and merchant banks begin to move in directions such as these, the move generally goes a considerable way.

ALTHOUGH reports of a split within the Industrial Policy Group of industrialists led by Sir Paul Chambers have been denied, it seems clear enough that the members of this group, representative of some thirty of the country's leading industrial organizations, have not agreed on the desirability or wisdom of making group pronouncements on economic policy – or at least of making one immediately before the Budget. For those who consider that a government of businessmen would be a worth-while alternative to a government of politicians, the differences within the Industrial Policy Group must surely indicate that businessmen, if in government, would soon become quasi-politicians holding differing views – and possibly eventually forming different groups or parties to put those views forward.

REPORTS that the Royal Exchange Assurance group plans to move much of its operational organization out of the City indicate a strengthening of a trend that has developed almost remorselessly in recent years. The paper and clerical work concerned with insurance can certainly be done cheaper outside the City than inside where rents and rates are high and wage costs equally so. Taking 'the works', so to speak, into the country and maintaining a City base and policy head office in London is the current insurance company style.

Fifth Conference of Asian and Pacific Accountants

Successful International Meeting in New Zealand

In the presence of a distinguished assembly including members of the New Zealand Government, Members of Parliament, civic representatives, and delegates from seventeen countries including Australia, Canada, India, Pakistan, Japan, the Philippines, and the United States, the fifth Conference of Asian and Pacific Accountants was officially opened in the Town Hall, Wellington, New Zealand, on Friday, February 13th, by the Prime Minister of New Zealand, the Right Hon. Mr Keith Holyoake.

The conference, which was held under the auspices of the New Zealand Society of Accountants, was in two sections—the first in Wellington from February 13th to February 17th, and the second in Christchurch, from February 18th to 21st—and dealt with a wide range of subjects and problems relating to the profession.

Chairman's opening remarks

Welcoming delegates, Mr H. G. West, F.P.A.N.Z., the Conference Chairman and a former President of the New Zealand Society of Accountants, said that the occasion was one which his society had been looking forward to with the keenest anticipation.

'We are', said Mr West, 'in a very real sense a part of the Asian and Pacific area from which this conference takes its name, and it is a fitting recognition of this extension of the borders of our responsibility that our Government has given the conference its encouragement and support'.

It was strange, he declared, that in matters of science and technology one was prepared to accept that the incredible would be achieved tomorrow and the impossible the day after. Yet in matters with which accountants were concerned there was a hesitancy to depart from the customs of the past. It was true that they availed themselves of the modern ways of doing things, but were they, he wondered, largely the same old things. 'Are we asking our national leaders to solve twentieth century problems by eighteenth century methods? In what other terms can you explain, for instance, the endemic disease of balance of payments deficits and the contagious remedy of devaluation?'

'We all know', Mr West said, 'that the time would come when differing ideologies and different religious or economic beliefs would no longer divide us as they do today but would be reconciled to allow our energies and resources to be used for the benefit of that one world which is as yet only a dream. If, during the next few days', he concluded, 'we can take but one short pace along that long road, then our conference will indeed have been an outstanding success'.

Prime Minister's inaugural address

The Right Hon. Mr Keith Holyoake, the New Zealand

Prime Minister, said that he counted it an honour to officially open the conference. 'To those who come from overseas I would say that I do hope you will enjoy your stay here and that your deliberations will be profitable to you and your countries'.

Mr Holyoake said that he had been asked to speak on a topic of his own choosing, and as New Zealand was a country with one of the highest trading figures per head of population in the world, he would take that as his subject. 'As accountants and business administrators you are actively concerned with international trade and economics and with all their ramifications and implications. For these reasons I would like today to survey some aspects of New Zealand's economic ties and trade with Asian and Pacific countries. For New Zealand, in South-east Asia and the Pacific there are two large markets – Australia and Japan'.

His country's trade with Australia, he said, was governed by the New Zealand-Australia free trade agreement – NAFTA – concluded in 1965. Although exports to Australia in 1965–66 had doubled since 1956, they had been virtually static for the last three years. It was still too early to expect large increases in trade resulting from the agreement for the simple reason that in those cases where substantial tariff rates hindered trade these had not yet been phased out to the point where trade could flow over them. As duties were phased out and more goods became subject to the free trade provisions of the agreement, exports should increase.

The growth in trade with Japan, said Mr Holyoake, had been spectacular. Even in the last three years exports had doubled from $31 million in 1964-65 to $63.3 million in 1966-67 - the biggest increase being in wool and meat. Imports had been growing relatively more slowly than exports in recent years, but Japanese businessmen were taking increasing advantage of the opportunities the New Zealand market offered.

Although Australia and Japan had particular trading significance, it did not mean, he went on, that New Zealand in any way discounted its trading ties with other Pacific and Asian countries. The importance of smaller markets could not be measured just in terms of the volume and value of exports. Apart from looking for markets for the increasing quantities of his country's farming products which could not be economically disposed of in traditional areas, they were also looking for markets for the growing production of manufactured goods—in both these objectives the countries of the Asian and Pacific region were of increasing importance.

Referring to the United States and Canada, Mr Holyoake said that in terms of trade, the United States was, and had been for some time, their best customer after Great Britain, and exports in 1966-67 amounted to $113.7 million. But at only $10.6 million last year, he pointed out that exports to Canada were capable of considerable growth.

In his concluding remarks, Mr Holyoake said that the main characteristic of the countries of South-east Asia and the Pacific was the diversity of their political and economic interests and the unevenness of their development. 'We intend to continue our efforts to promote closer economic relations with countries of the region, assist with their economic development and expand trade with them'.

New Zealand Society President's address

Mr J. A. Valentine, B.COM., F.P.A.N.Z., President of the New Zealand Society of Accountants, in his address, said that the conference was an important occasion in the history of the profession in New Zealand.

Delegates and observers from twenty-two institutes and societies from nineteen countries were representing the profession, he said. 'We appreciate their presence and the support they have given this conference in many ways'. The previous host countries, said Mr Valentine, had been the Philippines, Australia, Japan and India. It was his Society's hope that the New Zealand conference would maintain the high standard which had been set in the past.

The international aspect of the accountancy profession was becoming increasingly evident, he said. As business operations, financing, production and marketing activities became more international in character, so did acceptance of common standards of practice become more important. There was no doubt, he declared, that countries in the area represented by delegates at the conference would develop closer relations in the future, not only because of increasing trade but also because of closer co-operation in many other fields and activities in which they all had a common interest. Accountancy was such a field, he said, and discussions between the various professional bodies on topics such as those dealt with in the technical papers to be presented at the conference assisted in achieving a more uniform development in the future.

As responsible accountancy institutes and societies, it was essential to provide a framework to ensure that the profession was able to measure up to the challenges of the future and so at this conference, he added, 'we share our knowledge and ideas with this objective in view'.

Mayor of Wellington's welcome

In welcoming the conference to Wellington, the Mayor, Sir Francis Kitts, said that the field over which accountants ranged today was not only of local importance but of national importance and, as the present conference demonstrated, also international.

Referring to the history of accountancy, Sir Francis said that 6,000 years ago the Phoenicians gave the world accountancy and also the alphabet, while 4,000 years ago the Egyptians used to take the most intelligent slaves and give them training for two years in accountancy. 'I have discussed this with junior members of the profession and they are strong in their belief that things have not changed a bit! Then, much more recently, in about the eighteenth century, we had a learned judge in England stating that the affairs of a certain company had been left in the hands of an ignorant group of men called accountants!'

Concluding, he said: 'Your profession is one which has made a great contribution to the advancement and the development of countries and the relations between nations. Wherever accountancy has been of a high standard and accountants have been active in a nation's afairs it has been a period of advancement and progress. That is by no means a coincidence; it is because of the part you are able to play. I extend to you a warm welcome to our city. You will know when you leave New Zealand that you have been among friends and that you have made some contribution not only to the advancement of your profession but to the advancement also of human relations'.

SOCIAL AND INCIDENTAL ACTIVITIES

One of the many highlights of a full and interesting social programme for delegates and their ladies was a promenade concert in Wellington given by the New Zealand Broadcasting Corporation Symphony Orchestra. The Wellington proceedings closed with a conference dinner, held in the dining hall of the Student Union Building, Victoria University, and was followed by a programme of traditional and modern Maori songs and dances presented by Wellington's 'famed' Ngati-Poneke Maori Troupe. A visit next day by many delegates and their wives to the Masterton Agricultural and Pastoral Association show provided an opportunity to see a cross-section of New Zealand country life. In addition, there were special tours for the ladies including a coach trip through spectacular bush country to Otaki where a visit was made to the Maori church.

In Christchurch, a special luncheon was held by the Commonwealth Foundation which had provided some financial assistance towards the attendance of a number of Commonwealth visitors to the conference. The function provided a useful opportunity for an exchange of views on Commonwealth co-operation.

There was a conducted tour of Lincoln College – one of the two New Zealand Universities specializing in agriculture – as well as a conducted tour of Canterbury University followed by a reception given by the University's Student University

Among the many presentations made during the conference to the New Zealand Society of Accountants, Mr John W. Ross, B.COM., R.I.A., leader of the delegation of the Canadian Society of Industrial and Cost Accountants presented a totem to Mr J. A. Valentine, B.COM., F.P.A.N.Z., the New Zealand Society's President.

Next Conference

The next Asian and Pacific Conference of Accountants will take place in 1970 in Singapore. Like the New Zealand one, it may be divided into two parts – one part being held in Kuala Lumpur.

Death of Indian delegate

Delegates were distressed to learn during the Wellington proceedings of the death of Mr V. Ayyar, President of the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants of India. Mr Ayyar, who was due to act as Vice-Chairman at the technical session on 'The common body of knowledge required by accountants in the next decade' in the Christchurch section of the conference, was a former member of the United Kingdom Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

TECHNICAL SESSIONS

The accountant's role in a developing economy

In the first paper of the conference, Mr J. W. Rowe, B.Sc., M.A.(ECON.), Director of the New Zealand Institute of Economic Research commented that accounting is in the mainstream of material progress, as is shown by the accountant's dogged preference for objective facts. Adequate accounting was, he said, a pre-requisite for the efficient use of capital. Accurate and informative accounts encouraged the atmosphere of confident indispensable flow of investment. The various functions of accounting might, however, be more easily recognized if distinction was made between the 'micro' and the 'macro' administrative environments. At enterprise level, cost and management accounting were indispensable for progress – a statement true of affluent societies but even more true of relatively poor countries.

Improvements in productivity were generally associated with investment, and the key to efficient use of resources was project appraisal. Mr Rowe thought that accountants did not appear to play a sufficiently adequate part in public sector policy and implementation. Proper accounting procedures were necessary to ensure that a country's development proceeded via coherently integrated individual projects. Militating against global planning were the lack of adequate data and the dearth of administrative ability, but success had been achieved in Mexico and Israel with partial planning from the bottom up rather than from the top down.

Account should be taken of indirect benefits and costs, and wider political, strategic, cultural, and social issues are relative to major project evaluation. There was a choice of application in accounting between depth and breadth. In the long run, economic development must rest upon the efficient mobilization of internal capital. However, the most important issue in developing countries was the hard job of collecting and interpreting data for efficient production.

Dealing with the education and responsibilities of accountants in developing countries, Mr Rowe observed that the content of examination courses from developed countries had little or no application to the commercial environment of most emergent nations. The moral responsibility of accountants in a developing country was very great; adequate financial reporting was a major social responsibility and surely one of the profession's greatest challenges.

Accounting as an aid to efficient agriculture

Commenting on the very little research that had been done in improving financial records and reporting in the farming industry, Mr H. Russell Fountain, M.COM., F.P.A.N.Z., at the second technical session, blamed the accountancy profession, at least in part, that hitherto too little thought had been given to the basic concept of accounting in this area. Many accountants had been content to supply the minimum demanded by taxation authorities. There existed varied groups of users of accounting information such as producer boards and lending institutions, whose needs could not be met adequately without a standard terminology and presentation of accounts. It was also necessary to make comparison between the results of individual farms and those of a group of similar properties.

The matter of capital development was always a difficult question. It was comparatively easy to separate expenditure upon development, such as clearing of virgin land, but there was usually a continuous development of property within the normal plan of farming operations. It was most difficult to separate long-term effects from the short term.

Indicators of efficiency cited by Mr Fountain included:

- (a) gross income per effective acre to provide a measure of productivity;
- (b) net farm profit per acre;
- (c) yield per acre or per unit of livestock to give an indication of the rates of production;
- (d) the rate of return on assets employed indicating the efficiency in use of available resources.

Additional comparisons suggested were with past results and budgeted figures, in which the education of the farmer was an important function of the accountant. Farmers should consider their farm as a business and must apply the techniques of business management. He must be convinced that better accounting was a necessity in the face of overseas competition.

Improvement in accounting standards throughout the world

At the third technical session, Mr K. C. Keown, F.A.S.A., director of operations in Australia of Arthur Andersen & Co, emphasized the public confidence in the profession and in the financial statements for which accountants took responsibility. Practices had grown up throughout the world, either with or without academic research or backing, and had achieved a substantial measure of acceptance. The profession should strongly resist codification by governmental bodies but professional bodies must take the lead in formulating standards for the guidance of members. There should, at the same time, be an alteration of standards from time to time to respond to the needs of business and the community.

It was, he said, to the eternal credit of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales that, in 1941, when their country was literally fighting for its life, they found the time and energy to issue the first of a series of pronouncements on accounting principles. He also thought that the work being done by the Accounting Principles Board of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants seemed to be the best yardstick available for measuring work done elsewhere.

Mr K. C. Keown, F.S.A.A. (Australia) addressing the third technical session on 'Improvements in accounting standards throughout the world'. With him on the platform are (left to right), Mr G. H. Ward, C.A., Member of Council, Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario; Mr Y. Ohyama, Vice-President, Japanese Institute of Certified Public Accountants (session chairman); and Mr John J. Deering, C.P.A. (U.S.A.).

The way in which the profession should proceed internationally was that in each country the local professional bodies should take the lead in developing their own standards of practice. No-one else could do this.

The ethical basis of the profession

Three papers were contributed on this subject. In the first, Mr J. L. Rawnsley, F.C.A.(AUST.), described professional ethics (in common with Beethoven's 'B' Flat Sonata, opus 106) as a 'fugue in three voices with some liberties'.

After tracing the history of professional ethics in the course of which he sought clarification of to whom, and for what, was the accountant responsible, Mr Rawnsley examined the concept of an auditor's independence. Independent accountants should avoid situations in which there was or could be conflict of interests. Their professional judgement should not be influenced, or appear to have been influenced by pecuniary inducements. To be his own master, the accountant must have competence allied to his independence. While the internal accountant was necessarily a specialist, professional competence demanded that the accountant in public practice also should specialize.

The key to professional practice was integrity embracing within its scale the fairness, reticence, confidence and service, constituting the profession's true ethical basis.

Mr R. Kirk Batzer, C.P.A., national director of international services, Lybrand, Ross Bros & Montgomery (New York), concentrated upon the conflict inherent in the performance of management services to clients. In real life, he stated, it was recognized that there could be no absolute independence. How would one eliminate the size and importance of the audit fee from potential impingement? It would also seem unwise to pose rules for the profession based upon the degree of competence of the majority of its improvements. There was a growing public demand for symbols, and a tendency to rely upon them as evidence of underlying fact. Such reliance required clarity of meaning for professional qualification.

Functions of accounting societies

The first paper at this session was presented by Mr R. D. Thomas, F.C.A., Executive Director of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, who said that a professional organization must be based on the needs of its members. It followed that the characteristics of the organization would follow closely those of the professional group. The formalization of such an organization followed the realization that there was a 'body of knowledge' that must be added to and passed on. Mr Thomas emphasized that professional organization was an educational process, not least of which was the setting of in-service qualification standards, although conflict existed between the need for sufficient effective experience and deterring many of the best potential students.

Dealing with standards of conduct, he stated that effective means of maintenance of those standards must be established. The worth of the profession in the eyes of the community, and of students and future members, was established by ensuring that the public was made aware of the ways in which the professional man carried out his work. This was part of the process of recognition.

Mr Thomas put forward research as an important function – not a casual inquiry – involving critical and exhaustive investigation and experimentation. The objective was the revision of accepted theories, conclusions and laws in the light of new facts, and the practical application of the new theories.

In the second paper, Mr C. W. Andersen, DIP.COM., General Registrar, Australian Society of Accountants, traced the changing composition of the accounting profession and compared its present stage of growth and development with other professions. He placed special emphasis on continuing education and advanced studies after qualification, following with a consideration of the value of specialization and the function of research, advocating closer links with the higher institutions of learning. In these essential areas, leeway was rapidly being made up. In addition, the ranks of the profession were rapidly being closed. He looked forward to the time when accountants should have earned for themselves an equal standing and esteem with the other learned professions.

Implications of electronic data processing

At the session on 'The implications of E.D.P. for the accountancy profession', Mr James B. Kobak, C.P.A. (New York), emphasized that every auditor should have a basic training in the operation of E.D.P. equipment. The use of computers could be helpful to the accountant in the economical and efficient conduct of those audits where the client himself had no computer, in the accountant's own record keeping, in book-keeping for clients, in handling estate and trust accounting, and in the preparation of tax returns and tax planning.

Sophisticated knowledge of E.D.P. operation enabled the accountant to render valuable service to clients in determining whether such equipment should be used, how it should be used, and in helping with the installation. The accountant should either train some of his staff, or hire skilled technicians to help with many of the applications. He must have enough knowledge to supervise these people in their work.

Electronic data processing could be viewed either as a threat or an opportunity. The threat was unreal but the opportunity would be to render more and better services to clients.

Accounting as a service to management

The first of two papers on this important subject was given by Mr John W. Ross, B.COM., R.I.A., Director of Research, Society of Industrial and Cost Accountants of Canada, Tracing the development of needs for accounting services. he reviewed the current scale of social and scientific developments, stressing the exponential rate of change which had been and is taking place. In the business field, automation had spread from production into the areas of administration. It was no longer true that the management group was immune to forces of automata, since computers were not only replacing administrative workers but also performing some of the manager's work. The extent to which advanced information assistance would be developed and adopted would be likely to depend in the long run on the answers to two questions: (1) how well would they work?, and (2), what was the cost-benefit relationship?

Like the newer specialist and management itself, accountants had to take a leap forward in their intellectual pursuits and embrace new concepts and disciplines. At the same time it would be necessary for the accountant to refine accounting so that his output would be better oriented to the purposes that it served. Members of the profession must discover what they are, so that they may the better be able to determine what they may become in the future.

The Chief Justice of New Zealand, the Rt Hon. Sir Richard Wild, K.C.M.G., E.D., was guest of honour at the dinner, at which Mr Cleland spoke on behalf of the Commonwealth delegations, and Mr L. P. Vera, B.Sc.&E., President of the Philippine Institute of Certified Public Accountants, was spokesman for the other delegations attending the conference.

If accountants were to make a significant contribution to the management processes they must realize some fundamental facts; first, what information was relevant and necessary; secondly, what scale of measure or degree of accuracy was required for the purpose the information was serving; and, thirdly, how the necessary information should be presented or communicated.

In the second paper, Mr J. Anderson, C.A., F.C.A. (India), member of Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of India, examined the modern role of accounting as a staff function, existing primarily to aid management in the performance of its functions. Good accounting by itself he said, would not run a business – the decisions had to be taken by the management. After examining the importance and, with the aid of mechanization, the feasibility of responsibility accounting and budgetary control, Mr Anderson stressed the computer's ability to consider alternative plans in detail and to evolve the most desirable plan or budget, taking into consideration the objectives of management.

Knowledge required of accountants in the next decade

At the first session of the Canterbury (professional education) section of the conference, two papers were presented on 'The common body of knowledge required of accountants in the next decade'. In the first paper, Professor Paul Garner, Ph.D., Dean of the School of Commerce and Business Administration, University of Texas, presented a critique of the recently published book, Horizons for a Profession. He commented particularly on the emphasis on mathematics and research, the latter in his opinion, being under-emphasized. He drew attention to the lack of internationalism in the book and said that the survey as a whole should be the subject of much future discussion and implication at all everyday educational levels.

In the second paper, Mr E. H. Burgess, A.W.A., F.C.A. (AUST.), member of Council of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Australia, considered professional status, the development of the profession, and the limitations in the development of the common body of knowledge, and he went on to survey developments in North America, South Africa, New Zealand, Australia and Britain. He suggested a common body of knowledge, which he delineated under the headings of accounting, law, economics, the humanities, mathematics and statistics, and business principles. He traced the relationship between the individual and the advancement of knowledge through practical experience, self-education and research.

Education and training: means and methods

In the concluding session of the conference at Canterbury, three papers were contributed on the subject of 'The means and methods of professional education and training'. In the first, Mr B. P. Galvin, c.A., Director of Education, Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario, presented a summary of accountancy education and training in Canada. He felt that it was important to draw a distinction between education and training, and mentioned the wide application of the objectives of accountancy education set out in Horizons for a Profession. The future education and examination system must be related closely to the changing structure of the accountancy profession. In Canada, the future of the profession would be characterized by a slowing down of growth in numbers accompanied by an expansion in quality of services.

In the second paper, Mr Han Kang Hong, B.Sc. (ECON.) (Singapore), differentiated in the profession between 'mechanics, technicians and professionals'. Of particular importance was the training of researchers and the introduction of compulsory refresher courses for all qualified accountants in practice once in every five or more years.

Mr A. W. Graham, B.COM., F.R.A.N.Z., Secretary, New Zealand Society of Accountants, surveyed the qualities required by the profession and examined the availability of university training and the employment of alternatives in the form of polytechnics, technical colleges and correspondence tuition. The achievement of graduate status for the profession would, he said, require the creation of a new class of technicians in the accounting sphere.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Discounted Cash Flow or Discounted Money Flow?

SIR, - There appears to be a defect in the concept of discounted cash flow in that cash is not the normal method of accounting. Although annual accounting on a cash basis is not unknown, the universal normal method of annual accounting is on a credit basis.

If the basic data of a D.C.F. calculation is cash therefore and that of annual accounting is credit, then there is a lack of comparability between the forecasted cash amount of a D.C.F. calculation with the actual amount when it becomes known on a credit accounting basis. Since an essential feature of management accounting is comparison of forecasted with actual performance, this lack of comparability is an important disadvantage.

To remove this disadvantage, the basic data of D.C.F. should be credit computed in the same way as is usual in annual accounting. However, credit items should be discounted to their present value. For example, if income is receivable a year hence, one year's discount is deductible to reduce the amount to a present value. The same procedure would be applicable to a liability which is not immediately payable. Cash flows would then become money flows, the money flow of a year being the then present value of the credit transactions of that year.

This new view of cash flows makes conventional methods of balance sheet and profit and loss account accounting suspect. Is it right to include in a balance sheet at its face value, for example, a debt which is not receivable until a year hence? The answer clearly seems to be that the amount of the debt should be reduced by a year's discount to bring it back to its true present value.

What then is the true accounting of a long-term liability, for example, a borrowing of £1 million repayable at par at the end of five years with interest at 6 per cent per annum payable at the end of each of the five years? The present liability upon receipt of the amount of the loan at the beginning of the five years seems to be the sum of two figures – (1) the present value of £1 million payable five years hence and (2) the present value of an annuity of £,60,000 for five years.

The appropriate rate of discount would appear to be what might be called the 'riskless' rate, i.e. the rate appropriate where risk is minimal. This rate would, of course, be a lower one than the 6 per cent on the loan. Consequently the present liability in respect of the loan would work out at a figure more than the original amount of the loan, viz.,

This excess could be regarded as an asset, which would represent the present value of the annual service, over a period of five years, provided by £1 million being available for use in the business, such use being confidently expected to produce every year a higher rate of return, i.e. a profit, than the rate which it has cost to raise the money. The excess, regarded as an asset, would, of course, diminish proportionately over the five years as its use gradually expired over that period.

Yours faithfully,

Stanmore, Middlesex.

Companies Act Shortcomings

SIR, - Mr Shearman appears to have misunderstood several of the provisions of the Companies Acts 1948 and 1967 in relation to the matters raised in his letter published in your issue of February 24th. The first of these is in not apparently appreciating that the accounts to be annexed to an annual report are all those that have been laid before the company in general meeting during the period to which that return relates, and not merely those laid before the company at the annual general meeting. Therefore, whilst it is possible to delay the filing of the accounts by some twelve months or so by not presenting them at the annual general meeting but at an extraordinary general meeting held not less than fifteen days later, it is not possible to avoid filing them 'at all' as Mr Shearman states.

Also the Companies Act 1948 requires a company to lay its accounts before the company in general meeting within nine months of the date to which the balance sheet is made up (twelve months in certain instances). It would seem inappropriate, therefore, to suggest that 'Companies could be given a period of grace, say six months after the end of their financial year, in which to file the annual return, accounts and directors' report.

Yours faithfully, DENNIS E. COX.

Cheam, Surrey.

Decimal Currency

SIR, - In the February 10th issue of The Accountant, Mr D. Garbutt has pointed to one of the grave, and up till now, scarcely noticed problems arising from the Government's insistence on retaining the existing fix as the principal unit of currency after decimalization takes effect.

As I see it, in future every cash accounting record or document of any kind will require three columns for decimals to deal with the new half-penny (or £0.005) and Britain, it appears, will be the only major country to have a three-decimal-place system. So much for standardization! This means that for years to come and every year countless millions of 'noughts' or 'dashes' will have to be written by hand in the third decimal column and added up with the half-pennies, and all cash registers, accounting, adding, calculating and tabulating machines of every kind will be more complicated and therefore more costly.

Have the various professional accounting, secretarial, and management associations and the public at large fully appreciated the terrible cost of this piece of folly which is being imposed on them by theorists very largely, it seems, because the Gnomes of Zürich might not be able to divide or multiply by two when necessary.

The Government would like to think that their decision is final, but is it? Let me remind your readers that in 1943 the Inland Revenue produced a scheme for P.A.Y.E. which was accepted by all employers' associations and professional accounting bodies, as well as the trade unions, but that when details were released to the public it was quickly seen by a handful of industrial accountants that the scheme was totally impractical and frighteningly expensive in terms of clerical manpower. As a result of the agitation which ensued, a meeting attended by most of the prominent accountants in industry, was held in London and addressed by the then head of the Inland Revenue, Mr (now Sir) Paul Chambers, who uncompromisingly told the meeting that in spite of the protests and arguments no change could be made to the Inland Revenue scheme. However, Sir Paul was a big enough man even then to bow to opinion and a few months later the official scheme was modified along the lines advocated by accountants who knew what they were talking about.

Surely we have now a parallel case in which it behoves all the interested professional bodies to get together to reexamine all the disadvantages of the proposed £1 unit, and with the powerful pressure which they can jointly bring to bear to force the theorists of Whitehall to see reason before it is too late. It has been done before, it can be done again.

Here also is a task which can be tackled individually by up and coming accountants and managers in calculating the real costs of the Government's proposals which the public will have to meet and which can be used by the ruling bodies as vital ammunition. Nothing talks louder than £0.000s.

Yours faithfully,
N. A. WALKER, F.C.W.A.,

Accountants and the Common Market

Closer Ties Urged at South Wales Dinner

ACCOUNTANTS will have a big part to play if Britain enters the Common Market, said Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, at the annual dinner of the South Wales and Monmouthshire Society of Chartered Accountants in Cardiff last Friday.

Responding to the toast to the Institute, Mr Parker said he had recently made a visit to east and central Africa, and he had also visited France, Belgium and Holland in his role as President of the Institute. He said that with the Common Market in mind their profession would be working closer with those in other countries and it was therefore imperative that accountants spoke the same language.

Profession's big role

Mr Parker said the English-speaking profession had a big role to play, and it was vitally important to strengthen the ties with other countries, including the United States and Canada. He added that it was for those purposes that the trips were being made, and it was vital that they should be carried on in the interests of the profession.

The toast to the Institute was proposed by Mr W. F. Cartwright, D.L., M.I.MECH.E., managing director of the British Steel Corporation, South Wales Group, who said accountants and engineers were working together more than ever before, and they would continue to do so in this computer age. He praised the work of Mr R. P. Tovey, the Society's President who was in fact the first president from the steel industry.

An appeal was made to chartered accountants by Mr T. Mervyn Jones, C.B.E., Chairman of the Wales Gas Board, when he responded to the toast of 'The Guests'. Wales, he claimed, should build its own Prince's Street and it should be in Cardiff, the capital of Wales, and on a par with the famous Prince's Street in Edinburgh.

He said that all the resources of the Civic Trust for Wales, of which he also was chairman, would be given to such a plan in the city, between Cathedral Road and the Julian Hodge building in Newport Road - a stretch of about a mile.

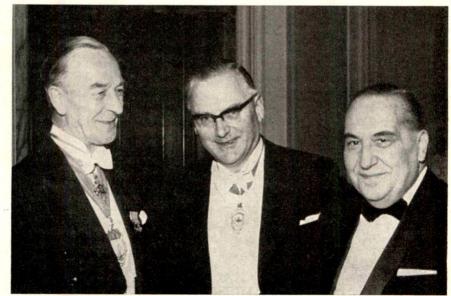

Mr Jones said he thought the name of this important thoroughfare should be Heol Tywysog which was Welsh for Prince's Way. He appealed to accountants in South Wales and Monmouthshire to support this enterprising plan.

Mr Jones said the scheme presented the city of Cardiff with an enormous administrative challenge, and he suggested that the Prince of Wales should open it officially in his investiture year.

He also praised the work of the chartered accountants and said he appreciated how much they were doing. He described them as the 'key men in the life of industry'.

Mr Tovey, President of the Society, proposed the toast of 'The Guests'.

Accountants Must Blow Their Own Trumpets — President at Bristol Dinner

CHARTERED accountants will have to be prepared to shed their traditional reticence and be more ready to 'blow their own trumpets', Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, told members of the West of England Society of Chartered Accountants at their annual dinner in the Grand Hotel, Bristol, on Thursday of last week.

Mr Parker, who was replying to the toast to the Institute, said that it was generally accepted that the respect which the great professions commanded was derived in part from the reticence of their members. If they blew their own trumpet too loudly they lost the respect of the public. But if they did not blow it enough, the public remained unaware of what accountants could do for them.

Delicate balance

There was a very delicate balance between reticence and publicity and it was a problem that was exercising the attention of an Institute committee. They would have to review their attitude towards publicity and their ethical rules.

There was a widespread feeling that in this competitive world the accountancy profession was not doing enough to put itself across to the public. In particular they ought to be much more seen and heard, and 'throwing their weight about more' in the general press, on radio and television, said Mr Parker.

But to do that would mean bringing more individuals into the limelight. Members would have to be prepared to face the glare of publicity. The public were not content with amorphous companies. They wanted to know the individuals – and what their Christian names were.

That would mean members exposing themselves to the risks and dangers of expressing views with which others might not agree or defending things which were not popular. He thought the Institute must, in the very near future, permit individual members to appear on television and radio, and to allow those with something worth while to say, to write letters to the newspapers over their own names.

Mr Parker said the extent and frequency of changes in legislation were increasing the complexity of accountants' lives. The service which they were giving and which was required of them was increasingly sophisticated and they were hampered by 'enormously complicated' legislation.

This was increasing the profession's costs a great deal. Members had to go on training courses and they had to 'stand-off' staff from immediate fee-earning work in order to study the latest techniques. Each one of them had to become sufficiently knowledgeable in all these things and it was clearly going to cost money. The time had come when no practitioner could pretend to be an expert in all these sophisticated matters and specializing in certain things was bound to increase.

Collective strength

Mr Parker said that members of the profession must be ready to lean on each other more. Their strength as a profession was a collective one – the pooling of their knowledge and resources. Every individual member had a duty to go to the support of every other member who needed it. That meant co-operation by individuals in the work of the Institute and in the work of the profession.

Chartered accountants had a great deal to offer – a wide range of services based on expertise, on hard studies and on practical studies which did not merely mean that they had passed tough examinations but that they had had community experiences and were used to dealing with a wide variety of problems.

Perfect harmony

Mr Parker paid tribute to the close and harmonious manner in which the accountancy profession and the legal profession worked together, which was by no means the experience in some other countries. In America there had been considerable friction and in South Africa there had been serious friction; but there was none of this in the United Kingdom. Both professions worked in perfect harmony, the members of each being careful not to offer advice which impinged on the field of the other.

Proposing a toast to the Institute Mr C. N. Clarke, a Bristol solicitor and Master of the City's Society of Merchant Venturers, said the standard of integrity among chartered accountants was higher than in any other profession in the country. Accountancy was one of the most valuable corrective helps available and it was on this that the country relied.

Mr S. V. P. Cornwell, M.C., M.A., F.C.A., President of the Society, in the Chair, proposed toasts to 'The City and County of Bristol', and to 'The Guests'. The Lord Mayor of Bristol, Alderman The Rev. F. C. Vyvyan-Jones, responded to the former, and Professor Ronald Tress, B.Sc.(ECON.), Chairman of the South West Economic Planning Council, responded on behalf of the guests.

STATISTICS FOR ACCOUNTANTS

WHY SHOULD AN ACCOUNTANT NEED STATISTICS?

The easy answer to this is that he will need to pass his examinations. All the major accountancy bodies now include statistics in their examination syllabuses. The student, be he working for the examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants or The Institute of Company Accountants will need a certain degree of statistical knowledge.

The more difficult answer is that he will need it in his work as an accountant. The fact that these professional bodies include it in their syllabuses indicates that they believe so and this is emphasized by the syllabus for the newly introduced JOINT DIPLOMA IN MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTING SERVICES where the study of statistics is required to an even more advanced level. From being merely a recording function accountancy has become a live information function. A major part of all information used and required by senior management is, and must be, supplied by the accountant.

ANOTHER BOOK
SERIES

7 MAY 1988

Price 42s net 43s post free U.K. Efficient Management – that is the great challenge to Industry and Commerce and the author has written this book with the object of explaining the development of an efficient financial information service for those whose job it is to prepare financial information for executive management.

Of particular value, are over eighty practical illustrations of accounting reports, applicable to many types and sizes of business, and based on a research project started in 1964 at the Manchester College of Commerce where the author is Senior Lecturer in Management Accounting.

Useful appendices on report preparation, reproduction, the use of charts, and the committee system in the interpretation and use of information, complete a practical book for the manager and accountant.

Students studying for examinations in the subject will find the contents of this book of assistance particularly for the Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, administered by the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants of the United Kingdom and Ireland, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, also for the Certificate in Management Information sponsored by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

MINISTRY OF TECHNOLOGY

Staff with good professional experience are required for work largely concerned with the pricing of Government Contracts for a wide range of aero-space and electronic equipment.

Opportunities for these appointments are now extended to accountants holding F.C.W.A. or A.C.W.A. qualifications.

Salary Scale:

Accountant:

£1,194-£1,682 p.a. £1,682-£2,319 p.a.

additional London Allowance: £125 p.a.

Starting salary according to age and experience; applicants must be at least 25 years of age for entry to the basic grade, or at least 30 years of age with appropriate post-qualification experience for the Senior grade.

Salaries for these grades are being reviewed and it is likely that increases will operate from January 1st, 1968.

Location: Most of these interesting and challenging posts are based on Central London, although considerable travelling within the United Kingdom to Ministry Contractors is involved; others can be based on Manchester or Bristol.

(Quote Ref: 19/1968)

Accountancy in Government Service

During 1968 a number of openings will arise for both young (including recently qualified) and more experienced accountants to take up careers in the Home Civil Service. For both levels of entry the qualification of Chartered or Certified Accountant is essential.

Their work will be varied, covering the full range of financial and cost accounting, together with some applications of up-to-date management accounting techniques in those Government departments which have contacts with the industrial and commercial world. They will have an important part in the control of Government expenditure. The posts are located mainly in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Cardiff, Newcastle, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

SENIOR ACCOUNTANTS

For the limited number of openings in this grade, candidates must have broadly based professional experience in order that they may take on senior responsibilities of complexity that call for initiative and the ability to present and argue a case. They must be at least 30 and normally under 45 years of age.

Salaries (Inner London) will be on the scale £1,807 to £2,444; for candidates of 35 or over with special qualifications or experience, starting salaries may be above the minimum. Noncontributory pension scheme. Reference 590/J /1.

ACCOUNTANTS

The professional experience of candidates for this level of entry will be judged in relation to their age, but they must be fully conversant with modern financial and cost accounting techniques and practice. The lower age limit is 23.

Starting salaries (Inner London) will range from £1,255 at 23 to £1,738 at 34 and over; appointment to the grade of Senior Accountant (see above) could come in two years. Non-contributory pension scheme. Reference 590/ J /2.

Promotion prospects for both the above grades are good to posts with salaries up to £3,050. There are also a number of higher posts carrying salaries up to £3,775 and above. Salaries under review and increases likely to operate from 1st January 1968.

Fuller details of all the appointments and a booklet outlining the work of accountants in the Government service may be obtained by writing to the Civil Service Commission, 23 Savile Row, London W.1, quoting the appropriate reference. Closing date 28th March 1968.

The company's record, recently published in the Press, shows a consistent growth in profitability (now £2·1 million and already well ahead in the first quarter of the new financial year) and a return or capital employed of over 40 per cent. Success has been due in no small measure to the Company's management system and methods of financial planning and control, which are becoming increasingly well known.

In order to develop and extend the system of financial management and control, the company recruits at regular intervals young men qualified in Accountancy who can expect, upon successful performance in a given job, to be promoted into broader fields of management at home or in Europe.

We now wish to fill the following vacancies:

MANAGEMENT AUDITOR

The audit function is concerned with the systematic appraisal of operating and administrative procedures and controls. An Internal Auditor is required who will analyse and constructively criticise systems and procedure performance and who will design measures that will progressively increase efficiency and control in all areas of the company's operations. His work will cover management procedure in the broadest sense and should not be interpreted in narrow financial terms. The position is U.K. based but probably will involve Continental Europe from time to time. Competence in another European language will be an advantage.

FINANCIAL PLANNER

Who will work with and assist Operational Management at high level in achieving greater managerial efficiency and cost effectiveness through the application and creative interpretation of budgetary planning and control. In addition he is responsible for developing control information and techniques.

FINANCIAL ACCOUNTANT

A feature of the Company's finencial accounting activity is the production of a daily income and surplus statement. Monthly accounts are finalised within 2½ days of the end of each period. An Assistant Accountant is required who will be particularly concerned in further developing working routines and procedures in all areas of financial accounting including product group accounts, cash and credit control and machine

Candidates, probably aged 22 to 26 and with qualifications relevant to the above appointments, should write giving brief career details which include salary and job progression and evidence of successful performance in whatever field to:

P. S. Simpson, Director of Organisation Development Black & Decker Limited Cannon Lane, Maidenhead, Berks

COMPUTER COURSES FOR ACCOUNTANTS

Can accountants in your company use computerised accounting techniques with confidence? If not this advertisement is important to you.

An increasing number of computerised methods are adopted daily in commerce and industry. It is essential for professional men to be properly trained in these new methods. Our beginners courses cover the essential aspects of data processing, e.g.: what a computer is, how accountants use computers, analysis of accounting systems, etc. On the course you will gradually become familiar with essential computer jargon. All lectures are given by professional men, with many years of practical experience in the computer industry.

You do not require a special knowledge of mathematics or computers to follow the course. On the course you will be given a FREE training manual which contains every lecture in full – there is no need to take notes.

The next course of eight evening lectures starts on April 3rd. Fee 20 gns. — No extras. For a FREE brochure phone HOL. 5155, or write to The School of Computer Training, Chancery House, Chancery Lane, WC2. Please quote Ref. SD.

Does your present Pension Scheme's growth include the full benefits which can be derived from successful investment

Most pension schemes are planned to provide for a predetermined annuity or capital sum for its purchase. Usually, only a portion of investment gains is made available to meet any possible additional requirements.

A privately administered pension plan can, however, be depended upon to achieve the maximum from successful investment. This is the way we work at Chase Manhattan. Pension plans are so devised that they create a fund into which all investment gains are ploughed back. The fund is better able, therefore, to safeguard the plan against such contingencies as inflation.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your organization's precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

The Chancellor's Dilemma

THE British public has not lacked suggestions as to what it may expect from Mr Roy Jenkins's maiden Budget. Admittedly most of the prognostications stem from private sources. Mr Jenkins himself has been as reticent as his office requires, apart from a warning that in the event of excessive pay awards he would be compelled to offset them with higher taxes.

The sharpest warning is in fact the latest – from the National Institute of Economic and Social Research which, in its new Economic Review, argues that the CHANCELLOR should remove anything between £450 and £600 million from the private sector in additional taxes.

To what extent can this assessment of the United Kingdom economic situation be regarded as realistic? Like any other forecast it depends on the accuracy of the assumptions concerning the prospective movement of the major variables in the economy; in particular, the growth in exports in the next six months and beyond, the trend of imports and the rate of industrial expansion. The Review predicates a growth rate of 4 per cent through the year which, given little change in the trend of wage and salary awards, would generate increases of about  $6\frac{1}{2}$  per cent in weekly earnings. It is therefore essential, if the advantages conferred on United Kingdom exporters by the devaluation are not to be eroded by rising costs, to prevent the excess incomes from diverting resources from the export industries into the home market.

Much of the discussion on Budget prospects has ignored the consequences for prices of devaluation itself. To date the effects on domestic prices from this particular source have not been widely felt; it will be some months before they fully work themselves through the economy. Such an increase in the price level is equivalent to additional taxation unless, of course, it is offset by corresponding increases in incomes.

It is imperative that labour costs be restrained. It is not so much the fact that increased incomes unaccompanied by greater productivity will erode the benefits of devaluation for exporters. They will also ensure that the volume of imports, instead of contracting, will continue at their past high level. On the other hand, if there should be a switch in consumer preferences from the more expensive imported foreign manufactures to home-produced goods, then such a switch would divert some potential exports into the domestic market.

For this reason the danger of such a diversion of resources must be countered. This can be done only by increasing taxes on consumer incomes, more especially on consumption. The Government has already announced the cuts it is prepared to make in public sector expenditure. However small they may seem to the taxpayer, they represent the limit of the Government's economies. The latest figures from the Board of Trade relating to industrial investment hardly support the view that some cut-back in investment is practicable. If anything, industrial investment needs to be increased. Accordingly the only area for cuts is consumption in the private sector.

How such cuts can be effected is another matter. In every year since the end of the war, money incomes and real living standards have risen, at least for the vast majority of the gainfully occupied population. Now it is proposed that the rise shall be halted. The consumer-cum-taxpayer could find his income frozen, his living costs rising and his taxes increased. Put in these simple terms it becomes somewhat difficult to accept as realistic recommendations that the Chancellor in two weeks' time should take another £600 million from the consumer except to the extent that incomes continue to rise.

Admittedly it would be possible to raise £600 million in more taxation without greatly affecting consumer incomes. For example, proposals for wealth or gift taxes have little relevance to the present economic problem. No doubt the former, if not the latter, would in time have repercussions on the pattern and levels of saving. But in the immediate future, i.e. during r968-69, they have no utility.

The CHANCELLOR could quite easily raise a further £200 million from an increase in S.E.T. A case could even be made for raising the cost of labour to employers in the service trades still higher if one actually believed that labour would in consequence be more efficiently deployed in manufacturing establishments!

For the additional taxes to have any immediate effect in restraining consumption they must fall upon the individual taxpayer during the present financial year. Thus the proposed cut in the child allowance, coupled with increased cash family allowances, will not help very much in this respect. It will trim the savings of the better-off and increase the spending of the lower income groups. An increase of 3d in the standard rate of income tax would be of little value; if the Chancellor is looking for revenue from the mass of taxpayers, a cut in the personal allowances or reduced rate reliefs makes more sense.

On the other hand, the same result could be achieved if the Chancellor could stimulate saving among the rank and file of income tax payers. Unfortunately, the mere provision of a higher yielding Savings Bond would merely encourage the switching of existing savings, rather than boost current savings. In any case the prospective increase in living costs makes hopes of higher savings altogether too unlikely.

Therefore it follows that the Chancellor should rely on higher indirect taxes which will reduce expenditure. Bearing in mind that the tobacco companies will have to increase prices to meet the higher cost of their tobacco imports, the scope for raising the tobacco duty is limited. A sharp cut-back in tobacco consumption is the last thing Mr Jenkins wants at the present time.

Much the same is true of the alcohol duty. The distillers are already worried about the state of the home market and there is no shortage of exportable spirits. Given the popularity of motoring, an increase in the petroleum duties would be profitable but would evoke protests from the well-organized transport lobby. An increase in the motor-vehicle licence duty seems certain, although it is hardly a substantial revenue producer.

Thus the Chancellor is left with the purchase tax, for it is still too early to expect an added value tax. But will he anticipate the effects of such a tax by seeking to broaden the basis of the present tax? S.E.T. is the nearest approach so far to a tax on services. Unfortunately, the brunt of increases in the purchase tax falls on those industries producing consumer durables where there is a strong case for maintaining high sales and output. Furthermore, the recent buying spree on consumer durables may leave those industries somewhat flat later this year.

Higher purchase tax could be the last straw. If the economy really is going to achieve a 4 per cent growth rate, business confidence must not be impaired. There is too much facile talk of switching production from home to export markets; such changes take time and require an encouraging economic environment.

Finally, it is as well to remember that Britain's basic economic ills will not be cured merely by one Budget. Whatever the Chancellor does, it can only be the precursor to wider and more far-reaching changes in the utilization of labour and industrial equipment. That, after all, is the real problem. Unfortunately, with the I.M.F. and the overseas holders of sterling observing every move, Mr Jenkins may feel compelled to demonstrate with a 'tough' Budget the British public's capacity for economic masochism. Anything less might be an anti-climax!

Cost Accountants' Examinations

THERE were 7,663 candidates for the December 1967 examinations of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, of whom 2,929 were successful. The prizewinners in the various parts were:

First Place in Part V and the S. Laurence Gill Prize: Mr C. I. Ezeh, Walsall.

The Lewton Coronation Prize for the best paper in Advanced Accountancy and Financial Management (Part V): Mr R. S. Greenly, Guildford.

The Harold Wilmot Prize for Management Principles and Practice (Part V): Mr R. Goodman, Saltash.

First Place in Part IV and the Leverhulme Prize: Mr E. K. Roberts, Hitchin.

First Place in Part III and the Donald L. Moran Prize: Lieutenant A. Mills, Didcot.

The W. B. Flowers Prize for Financial Accountancy (Part III): Mr T. Walker, Tollerton.

First Place in Part II and the George Russell Memorial Prize: Mr J. W. Armstrong, Glasgow.

First place in Part I and the Roland Dunkerley Memorial Prize: Mr N. V. G. Carroll, Belfast.

The names of successful candidates in Parts IV and V together; V; IV; and III and IV together, appear on other pages of this issue.

C.B.I. Viewpoint

HOWEVER much faulty Government policies may impede management's own initiatives, there are nevertheless many vital matters in which management itself is immediately involved and which require urgent action', declared last week's statement of the Confederation of British Industry on 'Industrial management and the next two years'.

The statement thus falls into two separate parts: the first deals with the Government's errors of omission and commission, ranging from excessive and discriminatory taxation, to burdensome public sector expenditure and over-large unproductive bureaucracy with consistent over-optimism regarding economic policies, while the second part adopts a more positive approach to a number of wide ranging issues.

It recognizes the need for better management training in the new techniques and the need for management to 'embrace more whole-heartedly the need to make the customer the centre of its attention'. It also reviews the history of the 'standstill, severe restraint, and now the period of continued moderation' and stresses the urgency of the Government acquiring the necessary powers to enforce wage criteria similar to those in use today, but embodying no norm.

The C.B.I. is clearly unhappy with the Government's conflicting policies in respect of prices and incomes. It notes that management 'acquiesced in the association of wages and prices deeming it wise to assent to parallel treatment in the hope and expectation that by such assent some restraint in the preponderant bargaining position of unions would be attained'. The outcome of that experiment was that between December 1964 and November 1967 wholesale prices rose by 7.6 per cent, retail prices by 10.3 per cent, and wages and salary earnings by 20.7 per cent. 'Today it is recognized that parallel treatment is unrealistic', comments the C.B.I.

The statement makes a number of valid points in both its criticism and recommendations for the future. It is to be hoped that, bearing in mind the need for co-operation, the Government will not simply reject the views as partisan.

Costing Government Contracts

WHAT is perhaps surprising about the findings of the Wilson Report on the Bristol Siddeley engines' contracts is not that the Government were misled and taxpayers mulcted, but that such happenings occur so infrequently. The Wilson Report states that not only was there over- and double-charging for the work done but, more serious, that some senior officials were aware of these practices.

Whether in the course of the negotiations the company's representatives were, as the chairman, Sir Reginald Verdon Smith contends, 'over-enthusiastic and unwise' or, as no doubt some M.P.s will doubtless suggest, deliberately exploiting the taxpayer, will doubtless be determined in due course. The company has already repaid the Government nearly £4 million of excessive profits and, according to the Wilson report, such a settlement does not appear to be unreasonable.

The real point is that the Ministry's Directorate of Technical Costings fell seriously below a reasonable standard of competence. Most taxpayers and businessmen who have to pay for their own mistakes would probably express the same point more forcefully! In addition to the need for more qualified accountants, what is to be done to ensure that the Government does get value for money in future?

Mr John Diamond, F.C.A., Chief Secretary to the Treasury, announced last week – as noted in 'Current Affairs' in last week's issue – the basis of a new agreement with industry to avoid a repetition of the Ferranti and Bristol Siddeley cases. Briefly, the agreement gives the Government equality of information and post-costing facilities; to industry it gives a better profits basis and access to an impartial review board in event of dispute, as well as compensation for losses on any such contracts. Let us hope that the new system will work.

S.E.T. Appeals Fail

TWO more appeals arising out of refusals by the Industrial Tribunal to authorize the refund of selective employment payments have failed. In Prestcold (Central) Ltd v. Minister of Labour, the company's activities included the manufacture and assembly of refrigerators and making or providing cooling rooms for abattoirs, canteens, hospitals and supermarkets. This involved surveying the site, designing the units required, selecting the machinery, planning the installation details, and supplying the equipment. The coolers required on the units were the only parts made by the company. Other component parts were obtained from third parties, and the wiring was carried out by others.

The Tribunal found that for all but 13½ per cent of its activities the company did no more than assemble parts manufactured by other companies. The Divisional Court, disapproving the Tribunal's decision on this point, held that in so far as the company assembled refrigerator parts, its activities came under the minimum list heading 339.3 covering manufacture of refrigerating machinery. However, assembling parts of the refrigeration machinery on the sites could not come under 339.3; it should come under Order XVII, heading 500, which dealt with construction. The company's appeal was dismissed.

In the second case, George Wimpey & Co Ltd had developed a so-called 'no fines method' of erecting shells of buildings by pouring concrete between upright shuttering, the concrete containing no fine particles. The company claimed that their workmen were engaged in manufacturing concrete products. Here again it was held that the process was work of construction, and therefore did not qualify for refund. Lord Parker said it was unnecessary to decide whether the men engaged on this particular work at each building site were a separate 'establishment', but the commonsense view was that they were not.

O. & M. in Government

WHATEVER may be the views of critics on the subject of Government expenditure, an article in the current issue of the O. & M. Bulletin (H.M.S.O., 12s annually) suggests that most departments are using the latest methods to cut costs and increase efficiency. Network analysis, for example, has been used in the setting up of the Land Commission as well as for several other purposes such as decimalization of the currency.

The article concludes from the experience of the Treasury teams that O. & M. assignments dealing with accounting procedures often pay dividends, particularly when checking is excessive. This, it notes, is a 'field where operational research techniques have something to offer and accountants are familiar with them'.

The introduction of the computer is an essential ingredient in policies designed to raise efficiency and reduce demands for staff. A new computer centre at Swansea is being set up to centralize the records of the 183 local vehicle licensing offices now dealing with 17 million vehicles and 20 million drivers. By 1980 it is expected that these totals will have risen to 25 and 30 million respectively.

An A.D.P. system is being introduced for the calculation and payment of short-term National Insurance

Gift for Moorgate Place

On a recent visit to Bristol, Mr W. E. Parker, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, was presented with a silver cigarette box for the Institute's new headquarters. The presentation was made on behalf of W. D. & H. O. Wills by the company's chairman and managing director, Mr J. D. Pile. Afterwards, Mr Parker was entertained to lunch at Wills and later toured the company's No. 1 cigarette factory.

In the picture, taken during the tour of the factory, are left to right: Mr F. J. Weeks, F.C.A., *accounting director of W. D. & H. O. Wills and a member of the Council of the Institute; Mr M. C. Ashill, F.C.A., an Under Secretary of the Institute; Mr W. E. Parker and Mr F. J. Bennett, factory manager.

benefits which are currently carried out in local offices. In similar fashion, police records relating to missing vehicles and stolen property, as well as fingerprints and an index of known criminals, are to be centralized.

A further article in the Bulletin discusses the Treasury's new management accounting unit, now just one year old. The unit is intended to help in the attainment of more economical or effective use of resources, as well as promoting the wider application of systematic costing, especially comparative costing. Among the new techniques applied is output budgeting, defined as a system of classifying as rigorously as possible all resources, or 'inputs', allocated to a particular service. The classification is determined by the objectives, main and minor, of the services as defined by those persons responsible for providing the service.

The particular merit of this technique, according to the Bulletin, is that it enforces a rigorous examination of objectives and enables the major policy choices to be clearly brought out. At the same time it is a help in improving long-term costing.

Economic Forecasts

WITH the Government and the other parts of what the economist describes as the 'public sector' absorbing nearly 40 per cent of the national income, some means of assessing its impact on the economy is required.

The Treasury and Central Statistical Office make short-term forecasts of expenditure, income and saving, as well as prices, three times yearly, states an article

by An Industrious Accountant

L'VE just discovered a hitherto – to me, at any rate – unrecorded auditor. True, he died in 113 A.D.; and he was in turn also lawyer, military tribune, treasury executive, consul, state prosecutor and special commissioner. Now and again, however, he performed audit functions not unlike those with which we are familiar today. He was the renowned Pliny the Younger whose published letters are contained in ten short volumes.

Pliny was no mean citizen of Rome. His uncle, admiral of the fleet, was famous for his gallant rescue attempt after Vesuvius destroyed Pompeii, when he died in the poisonous fumes. The younger man's letters show himself humane, generous, earnest and high-principled, if perhaps somewhat complacent about his own virtues, but he had a guileless honesty which is rather attractive.

I particularly like his decision (Book 4/10) when a deceased testator left a legacy to a slave 'whom I have ordered to be set free'. The legal experts held both the bequest to be invalid since the slave had not in fact, been freed, and also the gift of freedom as it had not been expressly granted. Pliny, as one of the heirs, generously granted both legacy and freedom, 'as honour puts us under the obligation'.

While many of the letters deal with assorted financial affairs like rents, investments, farm estates and grants, Pliny first refers to auditing in Book 7/31: 'I had been ordered by the Consular-Legate to audit the accounts of the cavalry and infantry divisions; in several cases I found a great deal of shocking rapacity and deliberate inaccuracy, by contrast with (Pollio's) accounts, which had been kept with scrupulous care and complete honesty'.

Later the Emperor Trajan sent him as special commissioner to the province of Bithynia, on the Black Sea, where two successive governors had been charged with peculation. His dispatches ring a familiar note:

Book 10/17A: '. . . now examining the finances of the town of Prusa, expenditure, revenues and sums owing, and finding the inspection increasingly necessary the more I look into the accounts. Large sums of money are detained in the hands of private individuals . . . and further sums are paid out for quite illegal purposes . . .'.

Book 10/17B: '... substantial sums of money could be recovered from contractors of public works if we had dependable surveys made'.

Book 10/39: '... I am afraid that there is misapplication of public funds at Nicaea ...'.

Pliny could move into action with firmness and tact. When he was auditing the accounts of the city of Byzantium, 'where expenditure had been very heavy', he found that delegates were sent annually with loyal addresses to Rome, for which travelling allowances were granted of 12,000 sesterces, and to the city of Moesia, of 3,000 sesterces. He promptly saved the money by sending on the addresses — without the delegates!

At the town of Apamea the citizens told Pliny (Book 10/47 that no senatorial governor had ever before scrutinized their accounts and it was their long-established custom to manage their affairs their own way, so he asked Trajan for advice. 'Assure them', replied the Emperor, 'that you make a special investigation at my express wish, without prejudice to their existing privileges... better not look into their reasons for saying that the governors refrained before.'

With many great names of the past, personalities are obscured by the public image but Pliny's last will showed his human side, at once sophisticated and charitable. He bequeathed money to build public baths, to care for orphans, to maintain the city library, and to give an annual dinner for his fellow citizens in his own birthplace of Comum. He was clearly a model accountant.

in the current issue of Economic Trends. Their purpose is to indicate the likely level of activity at the end of the period, and also to reveal changes in the pattern of income distribution.

In its discussion of the method of forecasting incomes, the article notes that over the past decade the share of company profits in total domestic income has fluctuated with the business cycle around a downward trend. During the period 1960-66 equity dividends have risen persistently from £1,020 million to £1,633 million, accounting for 27 and 35·1 per cent of the year's trading profits in 1960 and 1966 respectively. As a proportion of the income available for distribution, dividends show a similar pattern of increase from 27·1 to 34·1 per cent in the opening and final years of the period under review.

Decimal Currency Expressions

ANSWERS to some of the problems confronting accountants and the business community in preparing for the changeover to decimal currency in 1971 are given in a twelve-page booklet issued by the Decimal Currency Board last week.

Entitled Decimal Currency: expression of amounts in printing, writing and in speech, the booklet (available from H.M.S.O., price 1s) is the first of a series to be issued by the Decimal Currency Board and sets out methods of expression of amounts which the Board states are 'designed to avoid confusion, lessen the risk of mistakes and help people to become accustomed to the new system more quickly'.

Principal points summarized

The more important matters on which guidance is given in the booklet may be summarized as follows.

The  $\mathcal{L}$  symbol will be retained and will be placed before the amount to be written. The abbreviation for 'new penny' will be a small p and will be placed after the amount of the pence as 27p,  $53\frac{1}{2}$ p and so on, no full stop being used.

The decimal point and not the comma is the recommended sign. In printed or handwritten documents the point should be opposite the middle of the figure, but in typewritten or other documents produced on machines without a decimal point sign, then a full stop will be acceptable.

Whole pounds can be written either as £5, £2,750 etc., or as £5.00, £2,750.00 etc. When writing new pence they can be 6p or 97p. Alternatively £0.06 or £0.97 and so on. Mixed pounds and new pence will be £29.27, £5,397.27 etc., but amounts should not include both the £ and p signs.

The new halfpenny will be expressed as  $\frac{1}{2}$ p,  $3\frac{1}{2}$ p,  $28\frac{1}{2}$ p etc.; or written £0.00\frac{1}{2}, £0.03\frac{1}{2} or £0.28\frac{1}{2}.

Oral expression

When speaking of the new coinage it is best to use the pound if applicable. 'Two pounds seventy-five' will be clearer than 'Two seventy-five', but if there is any danger of ambiguity such as 'One pound fourteen' then the words 'new pence' should follow.

All other denominations such as shilling, florin, guinea will cease as it will be 'pounds and new pence' only. It is also incorrect to use '120 new pence' as this fails to recognize the f unit.

Amounts in columns, which will be headed with the  $\xi$  sign and not  $\xi$ p, can be expressed as:

4 \\
20.05\frac{1}{2} \\
123.45 \\
5.10 \\
0.02\frac{1}{2} \\
1,000.00
\end{array}$

In cash-books and stationery, two money columns will be provided instead of three. Pounds will appear in the first column and new pence and halfpence in the second. When existing three-column stationery is used, then the first column is for £s, the second for new pence and the third for halfpence.

Advice to customers of banks

The booklet concludes with brief guidance on drawing cheques in decimal amounts. The Board recommends the following methods:

Words

When handwritten:

Figures

£29-00 £29-26 £29-08 £0-26		••	 Twenty-nine pounds Twenty-nine pounds Twenty-nine pounds Twenty-six pence
When prin Figures £29.08 £0.26		• •	 Words Twenty-nine pounds Twenty-six pence.	08
When type Figures £29.00 £29.26	:d:		 Words Twenty-nine pounds Twenty-nine pounds	26

As is normal practice, the new halfpenny will be left off all cheques.

Although the new booklet is issued for 'guidance' and the Decimal Currency Board can only 'recommend', not impose uniformity, it seems a pity that so many possible alternatives have been suggested, such as  $\pounds_{5^{-1}4\frac{1}{2}}$ ,  $\pounds_{5^{\cdot}14\frac{1}{2}}$  and  $\pounds_{5^{\cdot}14\frac{1}{2}}$ . While if machines which are fully decimalized to the metric system are taken into account, it will have to be  $\pounds_{5^{\cdot}145}$  to include the new halfpenny.

What's Wrong with P.A.Y.E.?

And a New Scheme to Put it Right

by WILLIAM PHILLIPS, F.I.A., F.S.S.

NOWADAYS everyone is crying out for reform of income tax law and practice—that collection of patchwork put together over a period of very nearly two hundred years—but it is useless to scream for a radical overhaul unless the Treasury is told how it is to be done. Here, for the present, the writer limits himself to P.A.Y.E. and to the two not distinct questions 'What is wrong with the machinery by which it is collected?' and 'What is wrong with its basic scheme?' and attempts to provide a remedy for both.

When Northcote, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, having raised income tax from 2d to 3d in the  $\mathcal{L}$  in 1876, found it necessary in 1877 to raise it to 5d, he announced that there was no class which avoided payment of the tax so much as did wage earners, and said a scheme was under consideration by which employers would be required to stop the tax out of wage payments.

Sure enough, a mere sixty-three years later, namely, for the fiscal year 1940-41, this scheme was put into operation. The tax was calculated at the end of the year and deducted during the following year. It is a precise reversion to this scheme that the writer is about to advocate, with variations slight, but sufficient, he hopes, to justify the phrase 'new scheme'. The scheme of 1940-41 was abandoned in 1944 because if a man were to have high earnings one year (e.g. overpaid for some urgent war work) and low earnings the next, he would be paying a proportionately large amount of tax when he could least easily afford it - precisely the situation of Schedule D taxpayers today, cf course! Even with so-called 'pay claims' being allegedly resisted at the present time it seems unlikely that there will be any considerable number of pay reductions amongst wage earners in the near future.

P.A.Y.E. was introduced in 1944 with all the complications necessary to cover every conceivable situation. These complications which result from trying to get an instant tax deduction to stand on its feet on a revolving platform of remuneration variations, employment see-sawing back and fro to unemployment, the occasional jolts of changed marital status, size of family, mortgage and life assurance position, and so on, are probably not to be fully comprehended by anyone except the clerk who has had a lengthy course of handling the tax deductions every week of more than a mere handful of employees.

Switching from the 1940 system to P.A.Y.E. necessarily involved some transitional pains; a large part of the tax for 1943-44 was due to be paid in that fiscal year and to avoid an intolerable overlap a large part of it was cancelled. This was represented to the public as a magnificent gift and, indeed, some officers of the Inland Revenue still believe it to have been a very real cancellation - a point which the writer would dispute. There will similarly be transitional pains in changing back from P.A.Y.E. to the 1940 system, but no more need be said here on that subject, since the situation will be no different from that which constantly arises when a taxpayer ceases to be taxed under Schedule E and comes to be taxed under Schedule D because he has become self-employed, a change currently more frequent than hitherto (e.g. to avoid selective employment tax).

Working of existing machinery

The writer's first criticism of the machinery which has now plagued us for twenty-four years is that those expensively produced voluminous weekly (or monthly) tax tables are an unnecessary expense, and that in particular the code numbers so pompously produced by the Inland Revenue are quite idiotic.

As the code number plays so important (though farcical) a part in the official P.A.Y.E. machinery we must be clear as to what it is; it is no more than an indirect way of notifying 'total free pay' for the year, from table A, week 52 of the weekly tax tables, although as every single figure in this table when reduced to shillings is an exact multiple of 52, it may also be regarded as an indirect way of notifying the 'free pay' per week. It does not cover only reliefs and allowances. The code number goes up with the quantum of personal and other reliefs and allowances, and comes down to cover otherwise untaxed income apart from wages—for example, an employed widow's national pension.

Even an employer who has but one employee is deluged with forms, cards and instructions, most of which he will never need to use or even look at, and probably be unable to find if he ever does need them. Should some unusual point arise he will have to look it up in a forty-one-page booklet entitled Employers' Guide to Pay as You Earn. In Appendix I of this booklet he will find a list of twenty-seven forms which it is thought he may need from time to time. For example, whenever he engages a new employee he may find himself having to operate under an emergency code table (see section 73). If both a previous employer and the new one make wage payments to the employee in the same fiscal week (if that is the right term), very peculiar complications arise (see section 69).

What has here been called the fiscal week has no connection with the working week. This year week 48 runs from February 29th to March 6th, both days included, i.e. from a Thursday to the next following Wednesday. Last year week 48 ran from March 1st to 7th, a Wednesday to the next following Tuesday.

Unchanged code number and wages

For many employees both the code number and the wages remain constant throughout the year. Take, for example, a first-class private secretary, Miss Bright, paid (probably underpaid) at the rate of £20 a week, a single woman with no other income, her code number being 200. By turning to the weekly tax tables for week 52 we learn that her 'total free pay to date' (which, of course, is no more or less than her total free pay for the fiscal year) is £283 8s. Dividing this by 52, the free pay per week is £5 9s, so that even under the present system, instead of notifying a code number all that is necessary is a notification that the 'free pay per week' is £5 9s.

Now turn back to Table A, week I, where for some mysterious reason the 'total free pay to date' (which, of course, is no more or less than the free pay for week I) is given as £5 10s. Why? This rate is continued for each of the first thirteen weeks, then reaching £71 10s – an excess of 13s. One does not need to be a higher mathematician to realize that thus starting with an error in excess, at some point during the fifty-two weeks the additional free pay per week will have to be less than £5 9s; and indeed, this 13s excess is corrected in week 14 by allowing an increase of 'total free pay to date' of £4 16s only, against the proper increase of £5 9s.

L5 9s. This peculiarity is only mentioned because the irregularity affects some of the other figures to which the writer will refer. If both the code number and the wages of Miss Bright remain constant throughout the fiscal year, her total 'taxable pay' for the year will be  $\pounds_{1,040}-\pounds_{283}$  8s= $\pounds_{756}$  12s. Her total tax payable for the year will be found by turning to week 52 of Table B where the nearest we can arrive at is shown against the so-called 'total taxable pay to date' of £756 10s as 'total tax due to date' (i.e. for the year) of £198 19s.

As in this neighbourhood of Table B the tax increase per 10s increase in 'total taxable pay to date', varies between 3s and 4s, we shall not expect the 'total tax due to date' (i.e. for the year) to be exactly divisible by 52, and sure enough on dividing £198 19s by 52 we do not have to carry the division sum further than 3.82 to see that the weekly tax lies between £3 16s and £3 17s. Multiplying £3 16s by 52 we get £197 12s, which is 27s short of the required total, so that the deduction for tax will be £3 16s for twenty-five weeks and £3 17s for twenty-seven weeks, alternated.

Ignoring for the moment the figures in Table I for weeks 11 to 15, column (2) gives for the first ten weeks of the year, the weekly tax deductions to be made by Miss Bright's employer, based only on the figure of £5 gs and the total tax for the year, namely, £198 198 obtained from week 52, Table B, assuming noth to be supplied by H.M. Commissioners instead of a completely unnecessary code number, and a pile of six books containing a set of Tables A and B. Column (8) shows the corresponding deduction figures arrived at by painstakingly using the code number and the said pile of six books of tables. The differences between the figures in columns (2) and (8) are partly due to the peculiarity of the 'total free pay to date' figures in Table A and partly to the arbitrary way in which the tax, to the nearest shilling, fluctuates from week to week; and the point is that it doesn't matter, for only the figure for week = 2 has any significance, only this figure is ever checked by H.M. Inspector, all the figures for weeks I to 52 being as ephemeral as the life of a butterfly.

To obtain the figures of column (8) — the only figures required week by week — the official method requires that one first constructs the column (4) figures of 'total pay to date', and by subtracting the corresponding week's column (5) figure of 'free pay to date' from Table A one arrives at the column (6) figure of 'total taxable pay to date', therefrom to construct, from Table B, the column (7) figure of 'total tax dee to date', and then arrive at the column (8) figures by subtraction of adjacent pairs of figures of column (7).

The proposed method not only does not require the column (4) figures, it likewise does not require the column (6) figures of 'total taxable pay to date' in order to construct column (3). In short, two columns suffice as against the five columns of the official method; and in place of the subtraction sums required by the official method to get from column (7) to column (8), the proposed method substitutes the simpler (and so less liable to error) addition of the figures in column (2) to construct column (3).

Free pay for the year

Before proceeding further it is necessary to explain how it comes that although Miss Bright is entitled to no allowance other than the single person's £220, the code number supplied to her employer – like a top secret communication from MI6 – reveals on being decoded that her free pay for the year is £283 8s. Any ordinary person, setting out to calculate Miss Bright's total tax for the year, would proceed thus:

owance 220
s pay 231
	451
• •	589
• •	3co =	80	0	0
		owance 220 ss pay 231	0 i,045 owance 220 ss pay 231 $\frac{451}{589}$ $\frac{300}{500} = 80$	owance 220 ss pay 231

- a figure necessarily more exact than can be obtained for Table B, week 52, and one which, as we have seen, gives from Table B, as nearest, £198 198, of which the equivalent is twenty-five weeks at £3 16s and twenty-seven weeks at £3 17s. (The writer refrains from dealing with the position when there will be fifty-three pay-day deductions in the year, because in the scheme he is going to advocate there will not be either fifty-two or fifty-three tax deductions in the year, but invariably fifty.)

Miss Bright could work out the figures just given for herself while taking her eleven o'clock cup of coffee and, indeed, it is the method of H.M. Inspector of Taxes in dealing with a Schedule D taxpayer while taking a cup of tea. The reason it is not used for P.A.Y.E. is that employers are presumably not trusted to calculate and deduct two-ninths of the gross pay. This is taken care of in the figures in Table B, what those tables call 'taxable pay', meaning 'pay to be taxed at two-ninths of appropriate rates'. This, admittedly, is a sensible way of dealing with earned income relief and explains why the present standard rate of income tax is 99d, i.e. so that the standard rate for earned income shall be 77d; but it is not, of course, the method laid down by statute law.

As under the present P.A.Y.E. system we are to deduct only a figure appropriate to the £220 allowance—miscalled 'free pay'—we must gross it up, i.e. by multiplying by nine-sevenths, so that the £220 allowance will not be defrauded of the earned income relief. £220 plus two-sevenths thereof gives £282.857 which, to the nearest multiple of 52s, is £283 8s, as shown by Table A, week 52, for Code 200.

Other grossed-up figures

While we are on the subject, the code for a married man with no child allowances or any other than the personal allowances is 500, giving us from week 52 of Table A 'free pay for the year' of £439 8s, which is as near as the 'divisible by 52' arrangement can get to £340 × nine-sevenths, i.e. £437.143, say £437 2s 10d. Further, the £80 tax on the first £300 of so-called taxable pay will absorb, irrespective of sex and any number of allowances, the next £385.714; and indeed if we turn to week 52 of Table B we see that £385 10s of so-called taxable pay calls for £79 19s tax, and £386 for £80 1s. Finally, for those with low pay, £100 grossed up is £128.571, or, say, £128 11s 5d.

It is hoped that this digression will prevent anyone who feels inspired to practise his arithmetic on the six volumes of Weekly Tax Tables, from getting into that state of bewilderment in which the writer (like most actuaries a poor arithmetician) once found himself. Moreover, it leads to a method of calculating tax without that supposedly difficult task of calculating and deducting two-ninths of gross income.

So long as the present P.A.Y.E. scheme is continued – which the writer hopes will not be so long as to put the country to the expense of reprinting sets of tax deduction tables in decimalized currency — even the week 52 pages of Table B could be dispensed with if the Treasury would be consistent — if having grossed up the personal allowances by increasing them by two-sevenths, they would do the same for all other allowances, except those which reduce earned income relief (e.g. contributions to pension schemes) and for the points at which the rate of income tax changes from 4s to 6s and from 6s to 8s 3d, preferably rounding off the resulting figures.

However, to illustrate the way this new machinery would work we will use as two examples the grossed-up figures, to the nearest  $\mathcal{L}$ , just calculated. They are all, of course, completely independent of the size of the gross income. First we will recalculate the figures for Miss Bright, with her income of  $\mathcal{L}_{1,040}$  a year:

Table B gives £199 2s, a figure we should have reached precisely had we taken the 'free pay' and the tax on balance to a sufficient number of decimal places. If taxable pay is less than £386 the process is as follows:

	₽,	Tax L
Total gross pay in year	6.	40
Deduct 'Free pay' for year	. 2	83
Taxable pay	3:	. 57
Tax on first (grossed up £100) namely	. 12	28 20
Tax on balance at seven-ninths of 6s in the	£ 2:	2 9 53
Total tax in year		£73

(Table B gives £73 6s.) And, similarly, an income of £340 gives 'taxable pay' of £57 which at seven-ninths of 4s in the £ is £8 17s 2d (Table B gives £8 17s).

Such ghastly arithmetic is common to any taxing prescription that if the Inland Revenue did act consistently, that is to say, if it grossed up all allowances except those which reduce earned income relief, and the points at which the sub-standard rates of income tax of seven-ninths of 4s and 6s respectively change, and Parliament did not round off the figures, then tax at seven-ninths of 6s could be readily calculated by multiplying the pay taxable at this rate (e.g. £96) by 2 and shifting the decimal point (so as, in effect, to divide by 10) and adding one-sixth: 19·2+3·4=22·6; and tax at 4s readily calculated, first, at the 6s rate and then, reduced by one-third.

However, noting that seven-ninths of 4s and 6s respectively are 3.111s and 4.667s respectively, it is urged that these rates, to be applied to layers of gross income, might well be changed to 3s and 5s, if the grossed-up layers were respectively 'first £165' and 'next £221', which would give the tax on the whole £386 (£300 grossed up) as £80, while only penalizing the man whose 'taxable pay' is less than £165 by to very slight extent. (Of course in practice the precise figure of £80 would be abandoned by making the bottom slice £160, say, at 3s in the £ and the next higher slice £220, say, at 5s in the £.

Changed wages

To resume, it may well be offered as criticism that the writer has illustrated the proposed method by the simple case of both code number and wages remaining constant throughout the fiscal year. Suppose that the £20-a-week Miss Bright, having become aware of the fact that she is underpaid, negotiates a rise to £24 a week commencing in the eleventh week of the fiscal year.

We first note from column (5) of the Table I that at the end of week 10 the 'total tax to date' is £38 5s. We then do a little simple arithmetic, remembering that the code number (long since ignored) has given a 'free pay' for the year of £283 8s, which remains unaltered, of course. Ten weeks at £20 and forty-two weeks at £24 gives a total pay for the year of £1,208, and deducting £283 8s we arrive at the 'total taxable pay' for the year of £924 12s. All of our six weekly tax tables have been destroyed by fire, except Table B for week 52, from which we find that the 'total tax payable' for the year corresponding to this 'total taxable pay' is £253. As £38 5s of this has already been deducted, a balance of £214 15s is left to be deducted over the remaining forty-two weeks. By the same process used to spread a year's tax over fifty-two weeks we find that to collect this balance we must deduct £5 2s for each of thirty-one weeks, and £5 3s for each of eleven weeks. Weeks 11 to 15 in Table I show the start of this procedure.

It should not be necessary to point out that the figures of Table I are equally appropriate to a change of employment at the end of week 10, at an enhanced wage, where no unemployment intervenes. One is not criticizing the machinery for its effect on deductions when the rate of wage is increased (or, for that matter, reduced); everything continues smoothly under the official method, one has only been concerned to show that it continues equally smoothly under the simpler method now being advocated.

But an entirely different position arises when a code number is changed during the course of the fiscal year; the new method works smoothly, the official method, as we shall see, is thrown into chaos.

A Training Ground for Management

Internal audit department

by R. P. WYLDE, F.C.A.

COMPETITION and the increasing complexity of modern business have intensified the need to provide adequate training both for operatives and future management personnel. With Government support, specific training schemes have been encouraged for all major industries, while privately-run courses are obtainable without difficulty but at higher cost. Yet another training medium is the internal audit department which provides an excellent and inexpensive opportunity to gain a working knowledge of the company's operations — an essential for the future manager and a useful foundation for subsequent specialization.

Accounting background

As industry and the associated accounting requirements developed, ledger clerks and book-keepers were engaged in ever-increasing numbers in order to deal with the daily transactions. The chief accountant often found himself increasingly isolated from detailed accounting routines and in order to lessen his worries he appointed an internal auditor whose main responsibility was to ensure the accuracy of the records and the safety of the petty cash. The internal auditor primarily had an accounting background, frequently being recruited from the firm of auditors appointed for the company, and in the course of his duties so familiarized himself with the company's accounting procedures as to be eligible for promotion in that field.

Perhaps other members of the management team became jealous of the additional protection enjoyed by the finance and accounting organization and wished the internal audit function to be extended to cover their particular responsibilities. More likely, in the course of his audit activity, the internal auditor acquired a commercial outlook and searched for the reasons behind items of expenditure, for the authority and for the justification for spending the company's money. This led in turn to a study of the administrative procedures involved and naturally brought to light apparent timewasting, needless expenditure, or duplication of effort or records. Arising out of his critical analysis of existing procedures and controls the internal auditor found himself able to make recommendations for the improvement of operating efficiency and to achieve cost reductions.

Many industrial organizations today, recognizing the benefits which are to be obtained, extend the internal auditor's terms of reference to cover controls exercised over all procedures whether operational, administrative, accounting or financial, so that in due course he becomes conversant with all operations of his company. Audits, whether of accounting or administrative routines, in fact become operational audits and management in general — not only in the area of accounts and finance — is thus given the sense of security essential for decision-making.

In the larger industrial organizations may be found specialists in operational research, and in organization and methods. Although not necessarily specifically trained in these subjects, the internal auditor employs similar techniques in his detailed study of a particular operation and the advisability of maintaining separate O.R. and O. & M. departments is beginning to be questioned. Similarly internal auditors are closely associated with the mechanization of accounting procedures and with further development to more sophisticated systems of integrated data processing. Not only is the internal auditor concerned to ensure that controls are incorporated and retained in the programs but his prior audit experience can be invaluable to the systems analyst.

Depending on the size and complexity of a company's operations, the staff of the internal audit department should possess in greater or lesser degree all the above-mentioned skills together with tact and the ability to work in harmony with other people. Provided that he also possesses adequate leadership qualities, the experience gained in company procedures over a wide field should make an internal auditor an automatic candidate for promotion to senior management, and the concept of internal audit as a training ground restricted to the accounting sphere no longer obtains. Indeed, the internal audit department may well make provision for trainees who, after a few months assisting with operational audits, might be transferred to departments for which they were either specifically recruited or are found to be most suitable.

Adequate qualification

Development into the realms of operational auditing does not absolve the internal auditor from responsibility for the audit of accounting and financial records. This traditional duty remains and it is therefore desirable that he and members of his staff should be adequately qualified. Nevertheless, the comprehensive or selective checking of book entries – particularly in these days of mechanized book-keeping – becomes a comparatively minor internal audit activity; the main objective, to quote from an official statement by The Institute of Internal Auditors, is to assist all members of management in the effective discharge of their responsibilities.

In this way the internal auditor who becomes conversant with all aspects of the company's operations, and is similarly concerned with efficiency and profit, should well be able to assume wider administrative responsibility.

Consolidated Accounts – a Simple Technique – II

Professor of Accountancy, University of Port Elizabeth, South Africa

ORMALLY no difficulty is experienced with the adjustments necessary to prepare consolidations of holding companies and their wholly-owned subsidiaries. The introduction of minority interest should, therefore, be deferred until one has a complete grasp of the preparation of consolidated accounts involving wholly-owned subsidiaries. All the standard adjustments and complications must first be applied to wholly-owned subsidiaries. I am thinking here, inter alia, of (i) unearned profit on stock; (ii) depreciation adjustments on adjusted fixed asset values; (iii) adjustments in respect of current assets.

To introduce minority interest, the records to be maintained by the holding company are first considered. The mechanics of dealing with minority interest are also introduced by means of branch accounts. The example is that of a head office which buys a 'controlling' interest in a branch.

Example 6

Head office buys X's share (75 per cent) in a business for £30,000. The assets of the business are all considered to be worth their respective book values. The trial balance at January 1st, 1966 (the date head office becomes a partner in the branch) is as follows:

Capital X	• •	 • •	• •		£30,000
" Y		 			10,000
Sundry assets	• •	 • •		£,40,000

The 'branch' retains its own set of books. The head office will pay X and debit the amount to branch account. The branch will respond by transferring Capital X to head office account. The pro forma entries will be the same as for a wholly-owned branch. On the merged balance sheet Capital Y will be shown as 'partner's interest in branch'. Any profit at the end of a financial period will be divided between head office and Y, the other partner in the branch. The head office will respond by debiting branch account and crediting its profit and loss. In the head office/branch relationship this works fairly well.

If, however, the branch wants to keep the capital accounts fixed and operate current accounts, it becomes slightly more complicated. An analysed branch account is again indicated. If the example is taken still further to incorporate adjusted values of assets on which the purchase consideration was based, the problem becomes even more

The concluding part of an article based on a paper presented at the Second International Conference on Accounting Education held in London last September. complex. Assume that one asset is valued at £1,000 more than book value in order to arrive at the purchase consideration. Head office's share of this will be £750. The analysis column in the investment account will thus reveal £750. This amount, added to the figure at which the asset appears in the branch, will not be cost to either the branch or the head office. Because of the partner in the branch, the book value of the asset will not be changed; he is not interested in a merged balance sheet. To overcome this difficulty the branch account is debited and credited with the partner's interest. In this case the analysis columns in the branch account will include a column headed: 'increased value-asset' as follows:

Branch Account

Increased value-asset	Dr
£750 250
1,000
Partner's share	Ce

The credit side is, for the sake of convenience, not shown on the right-hand side of the branch account, but immediately below. The net debit will remain the same (viz. £1,000-250=£750).

The application of this method, after the reader has become au fait with the analysis of the investment accounts of wholly-owned subsidiaries entails very little extra explanation.

Example 7

H Ltd bought 80 per cent of the shares in S Ltd on January 1st, 1965, for £50,000. The purchase price of the shares was based on a valuation of the tangible assets. These were all considered to be worth their book values, with the exception of land and buildings which were valued at £10,000 more than book value. The trial balance at the date of acquisition was as follows:

Share capital, authoriz	£40,000
General reserve	 ••,		5,000
Appropriation account	 		5,000
Land and buildings	 	 £30,000

		M	inority interest			Cr	Step (2)
	£2,000	£1,000	£1,000	£8,000	£12,000	1	Step (2)

^{*}In this case it has been assumed that the amount paid in excess of the shareholders' interest is a mixture of 'cost of control' and 'goodwill'; it is therefore unrealistic to write up the minority's shame of this asset.

The first stage of analysing the investment account is:

investment - S Ltd

Goodwill	Increased value – land and buildings	Appro- priation account	General reserve	Skare capital	Total
£2,000	£8,000	£4,000	£4,000	£32,000	£50,000

The pro forma journal entry on consolidation to eliminate the investment account and the total shareholder.' interest in the subsidiary company is obtained from the debit and credit sides of the investment account, and is as follows:

Goodwill (i)		• •	£2,000
Land and buildings (ii)	••		10,000
Appropriation account - S Lt	d (iii)		5,000
General reserve - S Ltd (iv)			5,000
Share capital - S Ltd (v)			40,000
Investment - S Ltd (vi-vii)		• •		£50,000
Minority interest (vii)	• •	••		12,000

To introduce the memo column at this stage merely means an extra column and recording the share of profit pertaining to the holding company opposite the debit of the investment account; the minority's share of the profit being recorded opposite the credit side of the investment account. Assume that the profit for the first year after the acquisition (i.e. to December 31st, 1965) of the shares in S Ltd in the Example 7 was £10,000. The completed investment account will appear as shown at the foot of the page.

£2,000	Dec. 31st	Profit	_	£2,000	£1,000	£1,000	£8,00 0	£,12,000

In completing the above, it is again possible to reconcile the investment account with the shareholders' interest in the subsidiary company.

In using the above method it must be appreciated that the normal adjustments which should be made when preparing consolidated accounts must still be put through.

To illustrate how flexible this method is, let us look at some of the problems with which one is normally confronted and solve them by applying this method.

Example 8

Illustrating how an increase in value of a fixed asset will be dealt with in the investment account up to the point of time when the subsidiary company decides to sell the asset.

H Ltd bought all the shares in S Ltd on January 1st, 1963, and based the purchase price of the shares on a valuation of the tangible assets. All the assets were considered to be worth their book values with the exception of land which was considered to be worth £10,000 more than book value. The balance on S Ltd's appropriation account at the date of acquisition of the shares by H Ltd was £40,000. The relevant items above will appear in the investment account as follows:

Investment - S Ltd

£,10,000	£,40,000

Assume now that H Ltd was formed only to hold the shares of S Ltd whose only transaction is the sale of land on which it makes a profit thereon of £15,000 and S Ltd will credit the cash received for the land to the asset account and transfer the profit to profit and loss account. The investment account must consequently also change. (It would look rather silly to show 'increased value – land' as a separate item on the consolidated balance sheet.) The 'increased value – land £10,000' in order to arrive at the profit for the group as a whole. In the succeeding financial period this amount must form part of the opening balance on appropriation account in the subsidiary's books.

At this stage the appropriation account in S Ltd's books will appear at £55,000, being £40,000 opening balance plus £15,000 profit on sale of land. The consolidated appropriation account will, however, only show £5,000, being £5,000 profit on sale of land. If a sale of a fixed asset, on which the holding company has placed a value different from the book value at the date of acquisition of its interest in the subsidiary, is sold, the difference recorded in the analysis column must be transferred to the appropriation account. For the current year the difference must be related to the profit and loss item in order to determine either the profit or loss to the group. In this example, the £10,000 under 'increased value – land' will not be debited to land in the pro forma entry but to 'profit on sale of land', and transferred to the 'appropriation account' column, as follows:

Investment - S Ltd

Increased value – land	Appropriation account	2	?	Total
£,10,000 10,000	£40,000 10,000	?	?	?

At the end of the following financial year £50,000 will be debited to Appropriation Account – S Ltd, which will leave a balance of £5,000. This then is the correct opening balance on the consolidated appropriation account. Whether the adjustment is in an upward or downward direction makes no difference – the same principle applies.

In cases where the subsidiary company adjusts the book value of the asset to agree with the value placed on the asset by the holding company, we follow suit in the analysis columns of the investment account. Assume that in the above example S Ltd increased the book value of the asset by £10,000 and credited this amount to a capital reserve. The investment account will then appear as follows:

Investment - S Ltd

Capital reserve	Increased value - land	Appropriation account	?	3	Total
£10,000	£,10,000 10,000	£40,000	?	?	?
£10,000	_	£40,000	?	?	3

The pro forma journal entry on consolidation now becomes:

Capital reserve – S Ltd		£10,000
Appropriation account - S Ltd		40,000
Investment - S Ltd	••		. 3

Adjustments to current assets in order to arrive at the purchase consideration of the shares follow exactly the same pattern.

The issue of bonus shares by a subsidiary declared out of profits earned prior to the acquisition of the shares in the subsidiary is dealt with by transferring, from the 'appropriation account' column to 'share capital' column, an amount equal to the bonus shares issued.

Gradual acquisition of the shares in a subsidiary company is dealt with by completing the investment account at the last date of purchase of shares in that subsidiary, i.e. the minority's share is not recorded until the debit side of the investment account has been completely written up.

It is not the purpose of this article, however, to describe all the possible combinations of adjustments that may be encountered, but to illustrate a particular method which it is hoped will assist readers to understand all the intricate workings of holding companies and their subsidiaries. This method has helped me appreciate how many vexed questions remain unanswered in dealing with this particular subject.

I cannot conclude without mentioning him under whom I worked for more than a decade and who allowed me to develop this technique: I refer to Professor B. J. S. Wimble, Professor of Accountancy and currently Dean of the Faculty of Commerce, University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg. To him my thanks for all the pleasant arguments and stimulating discussions we had.

There follow two questions and suggested answers together with short explanatory notes on how this method may be used to solve the problems.

QUESTIONS AND SUGGESTED ANSWERS

Question 1

Investment Ltd was incorporated with a capital of £200,000 made up of 200,000 ordinary shares of £1 each. The company purchased the total issued capital of the B Co Ltd from the existing shareholders on January 1st, 1962. The purchase price of the 100,000 shares was £200,000 which was satisfied by the issue of shares in Investment Ltd, issued at a premium of 5s per share. The following was the summarized balance sheet of B Co Ltd as at January 1st, 1962:

Share capital
Authorized and issued 100,000 shares of £1
each, fully paid
Appropriation account
Sundry creditors

£100,000
94,000

£224,000

The profit of B Co Ltd for the year ended June 30th, 1962, was £37,000 and a dividend of £30,000 was declared out of these profits in June 1962 and paid during July. The fixed property was sold for £250,000 on July 1st, 1962. For the purpose of valuing the shares of the B Co Ltd the property was valued at £270,000 but the book value was not adjusted. B Co Ltd made a trading profit of £20,000 for the year ended June 30th, 1963, and this amount, together with the profit on the sale of the property was declared as a dividend on June 30th, 1963, and distributed in July 1963.

You are required to show, by means of journal entries, how the purchase of the shares in B Co Ltd and the receipt of dividends should be treated in the books of Investment Ltd; you should also include any other adjustments which you consider advisable.

You should assume that the profits have been earned evenly throughout the period.

Notes:

- (i) The purchase consideration was settled by the issue of shares (at a premium) by the holding company. Entry I, therefore, follows. The analysis of the investment account is done the reason why the holding company paid more for the shares than the shareholders' interest is given; consequently the details of the analysis column can be completed. The resultant £70,000 is, therefore, described as 'increase in value fixed property'.
- (ii) Entry 2 is arrived at after having recorded the profit to the date of the declaration of the dividend. The portion of the dividend in excess of the recorded profit is return of capital, hence the credit to the investment account. See (b) and (c) in investment account.
- (iii) Entry 3 is put through as the holding company incurred a loss. (If this loss is not taken into account in the books of the holding company, can the auditor certify the holding company's profit and loss as true and fair?) Nothing is gained by omitting this entry as the loss must be shown in the consolidated profit and loss account.
- (iv) Entries 4 and 5 are self-explanatory.
- (v) The balance of £50,000 on the 'Increased value fixed property' (see (e)) is transferred to the appropriation account column in the investment account. The subsidiary company transferred their profit of £50,000 on sale of fixed property to Appropriation Account.
- (vi) Entries 6, 7 and 8 follow the same pattern as above.

Occupational Pension Schemes and Social Security

A review of some points of topical interest in a recent paper to the Institute of Actuaries

by Our Insurance Correspondent

GAINST the background of the impending White Paper on earnings-related State pensions and increasing public interest in the future of social security generally, the Institute of Actuaries last week discussed a paper by Mr C. S. S. Lyon, M.A., F.I.A., on 'Social security and occupational pension schemes'.

In the course of his paper, Mr Lyon suggested that personal taxation and social security in Britain should be integrated. Should this happen, the existing flat-rate National Insurance contributions would disappear. Mr Lyon's view was that, even without a drastic reform of the tax system, they would be unlikely to survive a major revision of the National Insurance schemes.

Both the major political parties have expressed themselves in favour of the replacement of these contributions (at least in part) by earnings-related contributions. At the last Labour Party Conference, Mr R. H. S. Crossman said that the proposals which would be introduced by the Government would include 'a single graded earnings contribution - a percentage on your earnings, with the employer paying his percentage . . . an absolutely straight single contribution for all social security'.

This would be helpful in a number of ways. As it is, increases in the flat-rate contributions over the years have led to the position where they bear harshly on lower-paid employees. They also make it costly for employers to engage part-time or handicapped persons.

Mr Lyon said that the pension benefits to be secured by fully earnings-related contributions could themselves be entirely related to earnings. On the other hand, Mr Crossman seemed to imply a simple relationship between contributions and pension accrual, superimposed on a guaranteed minimum benefit.

Range of earnings

What is not clear at this stage is what range of earnings the Government will propose to cover, and at what rate of pension accrual. Nor is it known whether index-linking will be included at this stage. What does seem probable is that earnings throughout working life will be brought into the calculation.

One of the problems which has to be solved is the marrying together of the new scheme and the old - so as to prevent a gap from evolving between the higher standards of the new scheme and what the old, through no fault of their own, could not get.

What is quite clear is that one of the most difficult problems which will be encountered with an earnings-related scheme will be to prevent unnecessary dislocation of occupational pension schemes. Mr Lyon felt that the simpler the structure of the State scheme, the easier it will be to achieve harmony.

Mr Lyon said it was reasonable to assume that the Government's new scheme would be designed to produce benefits which, on an index-linked basis, were not less in real terms than those provided currently by the present scheme and were substantially better for those earning more than the national average.

Such benefits, he said, would involve a greater increase in real cost than was projected for the present scheme on the assumption of stable conditions. He thought that any scheme would widen by at least 50 per cent the earnings range on which graduated benefits accrue. Thus, unless the rate of accrual of pension was less than under the present scheme, or unless the guaranteed minimum pension was not a separate basic pension but was achieved by topping-up the earnings-related pension, the new scheme might well involve a pay-as-you-go cost of graduated pensions which, in real terms, was more than double the present forecast.

Higher contributions

On this basis, apart from demographic effects, the outgo on retirement pensions in terms of wages and salar es could increase by well over 50 per cent of its present level by the end of the century, and would still have some way to go before a stable level of cost was reached.

The alternative to committing future generations to very substantial increases in contributions to finance such benefits entirely on a pay-as-you-go basis would be either to build up a State fund of sufficient size for the investment income to counterbalance the increase in outgo, or to encourage occupational schemes to assume this task.

Compulsion on employers to relieve the State of the responsibility for providing earnings-related pensions would result in a cost equivalent to that of a fully-funded State scheme. Neither extreme, thought Mr Lyon, would be economically viable, especially if the benefits were indexlinked; for the cost of funding them would be a heavy burden when added to the cost of paying current basic benefits, and thus would be highly inflationary.

Basically, therefore, the choice lies between two systems of partial funding. Either the State could do the funding, with occupational schemes providing benefits in excess of the State scheme, or employers could be given the option of funding part of the State-ordained benefits under occupational schemes in return for an immediate abatement in the State contributions.

Disruption of occupational schemes

Whilst, said Mr Lyon, the former was 'deceptively simple', it carried the risk of political interference with the accumulation of the fund. Besides this, it would cause serious disruption of occupational schemes, and would prejudice to a greater or lesser degree their role as  $\varepsilon$  major source of personal savings. Also, by setting the pattern for a steady erosion of occupational pension schemes in the future, it might well retard, at least temporarily, the general trend towards better standards of pension provision above the State level.

Mr Lyon held the same view as do many others - that funding under occupational schemes is socially and economically preferable to State funding, and that the State should not only offer the facility for it, but should include some financial inducement to employers to use that facility

What method of abatement should be adopted Mr Lyon suggested that any State pension which accrued in some constant relationship to the contributions paid could be abated fully by a constant percentage abatement of the contributions. This, he said, should be determined by reference to the average commercial value of the benefits calculated on the basis of current cost. Since the State contributions would be required also to finance other social security benefits, no doubt they would be at a higher level than the current commercial cost of funding the accruing pensions, with the result that they could be only partially abated.

Abatement of benefits

If the State pension carried with it the absolute right to early payment of the accrued benefit on permanent invalidity (as proved to the satisfaction of a medical board) and to a widow's pension of a fixed proportion on the husband's death after retirement, then benefits, also, could be abated and account could be taken of them in determining the contribution abatement.

A full abatement of the State graduated pension, said Mr Lyon, provided a convenient method of ensuring a satisfactory end-product for the employee in terms of his total pension from his occupational scheme and from the State scheme. This requirement could be satisfied by neither partial abatement nor by the absence of abatement, unless the rules of the occupational scheme were altered so as to provide a pension which made the residual State benefit up to the desired level – for it was unlikely that the characteristics of the State scheme would exactly match those on which an employer wished his occupational scheme to be based.

Mr Lyon thought it probable that the Government will propose to minimize accruing pensions against general increases in prices or in levels of earnings. This could well take the form of a constant revaluation of accrued pensions according to the movement of an index, with the revaluation continuing once a pension had begun to be paid. It seems, however, impossible for terms of abatement to be devised which would recompense an employer for accepting the liability to immunize the equivalent pensions under an occupational scheme.

What benefits should be provided?

Whilst guaranteed immunization would be possible if Government securities were created which were linked to the same index, clearly for pension funds to be forced to lend all contribution abatements back to the Government would defeat the primary purpose of the abatement, which would be to enable pensions to be funded in a free investment market.

On this basis, abatement should be limited to the accruing pension and the immunizing factor should be carried by the State in all circumstances.

What benefits should be provided by an occupational pension scheme if abatement is permitted? Mr Lyon thought that benefits should accrue under an occupational pension scheme in the future at a tate somewhat in excess of the abatements. If this were so, it would be reasonable to expect the terms of the abatement to contain some financial inducement.

Financial Analysis to Guide Capital Expenditure Decisions

Research Report No. 43, National Association of Accountants, New York. $2.50.

In the space of some 190 pages of this research report, all the basic details of capital budgeting (long-range and annual) project evaluation, the various techniques of project financial analysis (present value, discounted cash flow, payback and return on investment), and various modern analytical techniques for capital expenditure evaluation (risk and sensitivity analysis, simulation, linear programming, C.P.A. and PERT) are discussed in considerable detail.

The emphasis in the report is most certainly on the practical rather than on the theoretical side. As is inevitable in a book intended primarily for American readers, a good deal of the discussion centres on the present value approach rather than the discounted cash flow. On the whole, however, a good balance is maintained. Another inevitable disadvantage from the point of view of British readers arises from the differences in the tax systems. But since the U.K. now has a corporation tax structure, with a rate which is not much below that in the United States, the difference is not now so great.

This is not a book for the general reader. For anyone, however, who has to deal with capital expenditure decisions, it will prove to be a most useful and practical handbook.

The Taxation of Private Investment Income

Editors: J. van Hoorn, jun., and Leo S. Ullman. Associate Editor: B. P. Dik.

International Bureau of Fiscal Documentation, Amsterdam. Basic volume £12 12s. Supplements £5 8s per annum.

This third volume in the I.B.F.D. series of guides to European taxation has appeared in response to wide demand for such a work following the publication of Volume 1 on the taxation of patent royalties etc. It is similarly in loose-leaf form and will be kept up-dated by loose-leaf supplements.

The purpose of the volume is to facilitate the comparison of the effective tax burden on dividends and interest paid by a corporation in any of seventeen countries in Europe, and in the United States, to an individual shareholder or creditor resident in any of those countries. However, in these days of rapid change and multiplicity of detail it is not surprising that the publishers sound the warning that the work can only provide the general rules and cannot reflect all the various special provisions which may be applicable to any specific investment. Consequently the volume does not pretend to obviate the need for local financial counsel, but rather is intended as a framework for analysis.

The volume is divided into eighteen chapters, each of which describes the taxation of investment income in one country. Each chapter is further divided into six subsections as follows:

- (i) Taxation of resident individuals;
- (ii) Taxation of dividends and interest from foreign sources received by a resident individual;
- (iii) Taxation of non-resident individuals;
- (iv) Taxation of dividends and interest received by a nonresident individual;
- (v) Effective total tax burdens on dividends and interest;
- (vi) Comparative table illustrating (a) the effective amount received by an individual shareholder in each of the other countries, if a corporation in a given country has an income of 100; (b) the amount a corporation in each of the countries must earn assuming its earnings are distributed, in order to give the shareholder a return of 100 (before individual income taxes).

There are also lists (for each country) of the major central or federal Government bonds which are exempt from taxation. Such exemptions generally have no effect for non-residents. The book is obviously one for reference purposes rather than for general reading. It is up to date to the beginning of November 1967.

The Financial Executive and the New Accounting

by Maurice E. Peloubet.

The Ronald Press Company, New York. $6.

One of the problems facing the professional accountant who wishes to extend the scope of his practice is to bring home to his clients the benefits they can derive from a comprehensive accountancy advisory service. In this book the author, a former Vice-President and Treasurer of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, whose name is familiar in the transatlantic field of accounting writing, presents a detailed guide to the range of services that can be obtained from professional firms in the U.S.A. He addresses himself primarily to financial executives and operating managements and illustrates by means of a series of short case studies the practical application of financial consultancy services to the solution of a wide variety of business problems. He also explains the background of investigations and audits and gives advice on selecting the proper professional firm.

A criticism of this book is that it is probably too comprehensive, and hence too lengthy, for the author's self-defined audience of managers and executives; but he has undoubtedly done a good public relations job for those firms of C.P.A.s who have the type of practice and organization to provide financial services on this scale.

and hospital authorities in Great Britain, Northern Ireland, and the Isle of Man. Other sections give details of hospital finance, Government departments and statutory bodies, local health authorities, executive councils, and hospital contributory and provident schemes. The substantial reference section includes notes for hospital administrators on legal, technical and general subjects.

In his review of the hospital service during the past year, the editor says that there has been some resurgence of discussion on possible alternative ways to finance the health service, or at least to free it from almost complete dependence on Exchequer money. 'Any hope', he adds, 'for substantial increases in the amount allocated must, however, depend on a marked improvement in the economy'. He expresses the view that whilst pressure on the service is likely to continue there is little prospect that its share of the national resources will be much increased over the next few years.

Mr Milne declares that efficient planning and management are essential and there is no reason to suppose that the general standard (of management) is lower than in other public services or in industry. 'Yet in a national service the variations in standard are undoubtedly disturbing'. However, the various measures for management training and development of staff should, he hopes, in the long run promise a higher general level and much less unevenness throughout the service.

Finance and Commerce

Woolworth's sales

SOME companies anticipate changes in company law as they affect the presentation of accounts; others prefer to wait until the law becomes operative. F. W. Woolworth & Co Ltd, in so far as reporting turnover is concerned, have held out against general recommendations and trends in supplying a sales figure (surely an essential statistic in judging store company profits) and have, in the 1967 report, shown the board's determination not to give this figure until the law demands.

Without a sales figure it is extremely difficult to put into true perspective the run-down in Woolworth's profits over the past three years. In 1965, profits before depreciation of £3,054,000 reached a peak of £42,297,000. In the following year profits eased to £41,853,000 before depreciation of £3,164,000 and, last year, profits showed a heavier decline at £39,952,000 when depreciation amounted to £3,198,000. Final net earnings over the same period have dropped from £23,380,000 to £21,090,000. The number of stores open in 1965 was 1,119. Last year it was 1,134.

Mr F. L. Chaplin, the chairman, comments in his annual review on the subject of rising operating costs. In 1967 costs, overall, were £2 million higher than in 1966, the 'greater part' of the rise relating to selective employment tax. Another material factor was the increase in local rates. Coupled with this, the company's policy has been to minimize price increases and to reduce prices wherever possible.

Below normal

The combined effect last year was reduced profit margins 'in a year when, over the country as a whole, there has not been a normal rate of sales expansion'. Without the figures to go on over a period, shareholders do not know what a normal rate of sales expansion is. But Mr Chaplin adds that the year's results were also affected by delayed deliveries of goods through industrial disputes at the docks and on the railways, causing 'a loss of sales both at home and overseas', and involving additional transport costs.

Repayment of the £5 million of 6 per cent preference

Repayment of the £5 million of 6 per cent preference capital resulted in a saving in the cost of dividend of £274,521 but the cost of financing the repayment has reduced pretax profit by £230,000 and net profit, after tax, by £134,000.

Pretax profit at £36,753,794 was down by £1,935,371 on 1966 and dividend is held at 20 per cent for the fourth consecutive year. Maintenance of the payment over that period has seen the Woolworth equity lose its growth rating on the stock-market.

Scrip issues were once a feature of Woolworth capital development but the last operation of that kind was a '1 for 1' issue in March 1964. The peak price of the 5s shares in 1964 was 33s 4d. Currently the price is 16s  $7\frac{1}{2}d$ , a 50 per cent drop in market price during a period in which equity shares have, in index terms, risen to new peaks is, to say the very least, an unimpressive performance.

New development

Over this period Woolworths have spent heavily on capital account. Last year net expenditure on fixed assets was £7,844,583 made up of £3,932,597 on freehold properties

£1,810,347 on leasehold properties and £2,101,639 on fixtures and equipment. At the end of the year capital spending commitments were put at £5:1 million compared with £3:8 million at the end of 1966.

The 1967 development programme comprised nine new stores (including the Woolco Department Store at Oadby, Leicester), eight relocated stores, fourteen major extensions and modernization of a further thirty-one. The development at Oadby is seen by Woolworths as a key development for the future.

The store there is three miles from the centre of Leicester. There is free parking space for 800 cars and the store has a ground-floor area of 91,000 square feet. 'The store', Mr Chaplin says, 'is organized as a mass display central check-out unit and incorporates the most up-to-date development in retailing. Various forms of credit facilities are offered and a Woolco credit card reduces formalities to a minimum.'

When customers have finished shopping they can take their purchases through the check-outs in the light-weight trolley baskets provided and transfer them to their cars in the pick-up area in front of the store. 'The build-up in regular credit customers', shareholders are told, 'proves that this out-of-town shopping meets a need stemming from the severe congestion in town centres.'

Two more

Two more Woolco stores will be opened this year at Thornaby-on-Tees in the late summer and at Bournemouth in the autumn. Both will be bigger than the Oadby operation, the Thornaby store having a floor area of 104,000 square feet and Bournemouth 114,000 square feet. There will be car parking space for 900 and 1,250 cars respectively. Trading experience at Oadby is said to confirm the company's belief 'in the successful future of out-of-town shopping on the Woolco pattern'.

This development, shareholders will hope, may put growth back into Woolworth's earnings but capital spending is obviously going to remain high during the development period. Many additional sites have been surveyed and negotiations are in various stages of development.

Meanwhile, the main problems in 1968 will arise from increased cost of goods and services as the result of devaluation. Mr Chaplin says, 'We anticipate pressure on profit margins which will be countered by a determined policy of sales expansion based on offering attractive merchandise at competitive prices and the most efficient economy in controllable expense.' In a year's time Woolworth shareholders will know for the first time what sales expansion means in real figures. But they should have been told the facts long before this.

CITY NOTES

ACCOUNTANT

IN stock-market terms the Budget has taken a back seat to the revival of the gold rush and the renewal of pressure on sterling and the dollar. Suggestions that South Africa might sell gold on the Paris, rather than the London, market as a reprisal for the United Kingdom arms trade boycott were part and parcel of the build-up of the gold scare and the resultant doubts about sterling and dollar stability.

Last November, when sterling was devalued, the cynical question was to ask when the next devaluation would be. The question may have seemed cynical at the time, but there is no doubting the present pressure on the gold market and on the gold price.

The obvious question now is just how long the United States, with a worsening balance of payments position, can continue to stand by thirty-five dollars an ounce for gold and a dollar parity aligned to it. From the sterling aspect, renewed pressure could not come at a worse time.

With a Budget to be presented four months after devaluation there is still, as yet, no firm defence for sterling. Bank rate must now stay at 8 per cent for a considerable time, even though it is clear that the level of Bank rate has little effect on the attraction of funds to London while there are more effective factors working the other way.

AFTER a short lull, merger activity has developed again with current attention directed to the merger talks between the Royal Exchange and Guardian ir surance groups. Both these companies have been high on the Stock Market's take-over list and the fact that they are talking a merger has given rise to suggestions that the talks may be interrupted by definite bids for either or both of them. The last major operation in the insurance merger market produced a keen battle for The Yorkshire Insurance Company between General Accident and Phoenix. It remains to be seen whether groups which the market regards as potential bidders will be prepared to let Royal Exchange and Guardian get away with a merger of their own.

THE pre-Budget rush of new issues is this year of modest proportions and contains the familiar run of companies in which family interests are retaining control. It also contains a minority of issues by tender. A marked point about this year's pre-Budget new issue crop, however, is that most are launched by issuing brokers rather than issuing houses and merchant banks. This results largely from the comparatively small size of the companies coming to the market but nevertheless it is an interesting development stemming particularly from the wider scope of stockbroking firms following the mergers of recent years.

NTRODUCTION of some form of dividend limitation under this month's Budget has become accepted as inevitable. The question is not whether it will be introduced, but how. Another period of voluntary restraint, particularly since the C.B.I. has advocated such a move, would probably be enough in so far as pegging dividends is concerned. But the impression is that the Chancellor will want to go some way further than that and even to the extent of introducing some added taxation on dividends as a whole or on the profits from which dividends are paid. Re-introduction of some kind of excess profits tax is considered likely, or some form of withholding tax in addition to the present standard rate of income tax under which dividends are now

Companies Act Shortcomings

SIR, – N. F. Shearman (February 24th issue), does at least declare his interest. To satisfy the needs of inquiry agents is one of the poorest reasons for this Act with its complicated provisions, especially those affecting previously exempt companies. However, Mr Shearman has made some valid points, especially as the Registrar was in arrears on the old provisions; a Parliamentary question some months ago revealed thousands of returns in arrears.

Instead of further complicated Acts, simplification is needed, with heavy penalties for those not complying, e.g. withdrawal of limited liability protection in certain cases.

With less paper work and unnecessary filing it would be easier to take action against the serious wrongdoer.

Even properly filed returns and accounts could be twelve to fifteen months old and how does this help credit assessment? Mr Shearman presumably still reports on partners and sole traders without having accounts for inspection.

Filed accounts as a protection for creditors is a myth (assuming one will be able to see the figures underneath all the notes and other irrelevant nonsense); good credit control will be far more use.

Yours faithfully,

F.C.A.

SIR, – May I point out to Mr Cox (March 2nd issue) that it is not I who have misunderstood the Companies Acts but he in naïvely assuming that because an Act requires something to be done it will be done. For example, annual general meetings have always been required by section 131, Companies Act 1948, but how many previously exempt private companies ever held an annual general meeting? Anyone who has searched company files at the Registration Office will know the number of companies that file annual returns with 'No annual general meeting having been held', without any retribution.

As with annual returns, so it will be with accounts and directors' reports because the Registrar of Companies has so little power of enforcement. The power of enforcement rests with the shareholders and they, in the case of previously exempt private companies, are in effect the company.

Yours faithfully,

N. F. SHEARMAN, Joint Secretary,

Building Society Interest

SIR, — The other day, when checking the interest charged by a building society, I made the following discovery which may not be known to the majority of borrowers.

As a rule repayments are made in shorter intervals than one year, probably on average in monthly instalments. The building society calculated the interest for the whole year disregarding the monthly instalments. If, e.g. the mortgage is £1,200, assuming a rate of 7 per cent, the interest charge is £84 and only the difference between this amount and the total of annual payments is applied to amortization.

The building societies, beyond doubt, fructify the moneys received month by month and actually receive a much higher rate than that officially charged. How much more they benefit depends upon the period during which the mortgage is repayable and upon the interest they gain on these monthly instalments. According to my calculation the benefit they reap quasi unofficially can be even 20 per cent of the official rate. I made inquiries and was told that all building societies proceed in the same way.

Decimal Currency

SIR, – May I support the remarks of Mr N. A. Walker in his letter in your March 2nd issue. Certainly the interested professional bodies should bring pressure to bear on this problem but it does not seem likely that they will do so unless a large number of their members will prod them into action by writing to secretaries, members of Councils, etc., and I would urge all those who agree with Mr Walker's feelings to do something positive by letting those in authority know how they feel.

Yours faithfully,

Bradford.

GEOFFREY ISLES, F.C.A.

Higher Entry Standards

SIR, —I would like to add to Mr Denza's comments on higher entry standards into the profession (February 17th issue) in saying that many boys at school with intelligence and personality do not find academic studies particularly interesting. Whilst these boys may leave school without 'A' levels, once they have entered into articles they become interested in the accountancy profession and realize that to be successful they must work hard to pass their examinations which they usually do with ease.

Should not the weeding out be done by increasing the standard of the Intermediate and Final examinations rather than preventing entry into the profession by demanding higher academic qualifications?

Yours faithfully,

M. T. F. McCLELLAND,

Barclaycard Index on Microfilm

AN index of the names, addresses and account numbers of more than a million people who hold Barclaycards has been created on microfilm to replace an index previously held on computer print-out paper. As between two hundred and four hundred references a day were made to the index its pages became soiled and difficult to read. It also occupied fifty large 3-inch thick files. This has now been condensed down to nine 4-inch square microfilm cartridges.

The adoption of microfilm at the Barclaycard centre in Northampton has meant a drastic saving of computer time. To print-out the index on 17×11 in. standard computer output paper took the computer a minimum of seventeen hours running at 1,000 lines per minute. To provide the microfilm version, the IBM system 360 model 50 took less than an hour. It put the index on to magnetic tape and this was transferred to microfilm on a special converter unit.

The 3M cartridge system is convenient to handle and any part of the index can be viewed on readers. Extra copies of the microfilm have been made and supplied to other departments who can now read their own information without reference to the master file. One office also has a reader-printer so that hard copy print-out can be made for dispatch in case of queries, with a copy in four seconds.

High speed reference and retrieval of information is the feature of the system. The relevant cartridge is selected by an index on its cover. This is then clipped into the reader, the film drive control turned, and the film threads itself automatically on to the take-up spool and runs across the screen at speeds controlled by the operator. An index counter on the viewing unit matches the index on the cartridge and indicates the approximate position of details of any particular card-holder. At maximum speed the entire 100 ft of film will cross the large viewing screen in less than fifteen seconds, so even details at the far end will only take this long to find. After viewing, the film drive control is reversed and the film returns to its indexed cartridge.

Computer-based Costing Service for Road Hauliers

A COMPUTER-BASED management information system which, it is claimed, provides comprehensive costing information for road haulage operators has been developed by English Electric Computers Ltd.

The system, called Haulacost, is being run on a KDF9 computer at the company's Kidsgrove bureau and provides a haulage operator with a regular detailed account for each of his vehicles and each of his customer operations. This information enables him to identify quickly those areas of work which provide either profit or loss. As the system is a continuous one, it is possible for the user to monitor the effect of any changes he makes in his pattern of operations.

Users of the Haulacost system will provide the Kidsgrove bureau with details of all vehicle journeys on a weekly or monthly basis, and will receive from the computer a complete cost analysis of the month's operation and year-to-date operations within a few days of the end of each month.

Once the input data has been processed, the computer produces a report for each vehicle journey showing the total cost, a detailed breakdown of the total cost, revenue earned, profit made, percentage of profit to revenue and percentage of profit to wages. In addition, monthly and year-to-date cost summary reports can be produced for each vehicle and all customer operations, and for groups of vehicles and customer operations.

One of the nine microfilm cartridges, which together contain an index of more than a million Barclaycard holders, about to be viewed on a 3M reader-printer. The index, which is used at the Barclaycard centre at Northampton, was previously on computer print-out paper and filled fifty of the three-inch thick files seen in the foreground.

Compact Dating and Numbering Machine

FOR the simultaneous dating and numbering of multiple carbon sets used in invoicing, purchasing or works orders, a machine known as the Model MPD can number consecutively or can repeat the same number up to ten times if necessary. As up to eight carbon copies can be imprinted at each impression, this permits the machine to be used for a wide variety of business systems.

The sizes of the figures can range from  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 6 mm with the date on either the left or the right of the number. The maximum imprint width is 49 mm (almost 2 ins) whilst the maximum reach to the centre of the imprint is 130 mm (just over 5 ins).

Foot or inset triggering is available to special order instead of the hand triggering usually supplied. The repeat and consecutive action model costs £160.

A. Ludwig & Sons Ltd, 333 Goswell Road, London EC1.

New British Typewriter Announced

THE Imperial Model 80 office manual typewriter has been announced by the Imperial Typewriter Co at a price of £85 for a 13-inch carriage. Although the Imperial Typewriter Co Ltd is now a division of Litton Industries, U.S.A., this new typewriter was designed by Mr Kenneth Grange, F.S.I.A., one of Britain's leading industrial designers, and is being manufactured at the company's Leicester factories.

There is a wide range of typefaces and a choice of five carriage lengths. Pearl grey is the standard colour, but persian green or tropic blue can be supplied to order, whilst a carbon ribbon attachment at £10 5s is also an optional extra.

Powerful New Computer

THE INTRODUCTION of International Computers and Tabulators' largest computer, the 1906A, now greatly extends the range of the company's 1900 series. It is claimed to be the most powerful computer committed for production by a British manufacturer. Prices will range from  $\pounds^1_2$  to  $\pounds^1_2$  million and deliveries will commence at the end of 1969.

The 1906A incorporates a number of features new to the 1900 series. New circuit technology is used to give greater computing power and the high speeds of fully integrated circuits based on Emitter Coupled Logic (E.C.L.) are fully exploited by a new method of matched inter-connections developed by the company, based on multi-layer platters. This, coupled with the provision of a fast, interleaved core store and an instruction overlap facility, makes possible processing speeds of some one million instructions a second. Another new feature is that of paging – a method of organizing the storage of information to make more flexible use of core store and a fast drum store, and to give more flexibility of programming.

To the commercial user it is claimed, that the 1906A can offer improved cost-effectiveness, and the ability to handle large quantities of data. It will transfer information between the central processor and the peripheral units at rates of 5 million characters a second. Thus it will be able to handle large numbers of peripherals including very fast devices such as a new drum operating at 1.5 million characters per

The new computer will be a fully compatible member of the 1900 series and programs developed by users of the series, and the full range of I.C.T.'s software will work on the 1906A. In addition, special programs for the 1906As will be provided. The compatibility of the new computer will also make it easier to build computer networks. Other 1900s already installed may be linked in hierarchical networks so that only the most complex problems are passed up to the 1906A.

'Win a Copier' Contest

KODAK LTD recently ran a contest called 'Win a Copier' in which the ten features of an office copier were to be placed in an order nearest to that chosen by a panel of judges.

The winning entry came from Mr E. T. Poole, secretary of Gilbraith Commercials Ltd, of Accrington, Lancs, a company that distributes Leyland Group vehicles. The items given in the order of importance were: (1) copies any kind of original; (2) makes copies on to ordinary paper; (3) makes lowest cost multiple copies; (4) makes permanent copies; (5) makes up to seven copies per minute; (6) gives reliable trouble-free service; (7) makes dry copies; (8) requires minimum use maintenance; (9) so simple that anyone can use it; (10) clean, modern styling.

Walkie-Talkie Ban

FROM April 1st this year, the Post Office are bringing in a ban on all radio transmitters which operate on the wrong frequencies for this country and cause interference. Importers and manufacturers must seek the authority of the Postmaster-General for apparatus which transmits in two wavebands, 25·1 to 29·7 and 88 to 108 Mc/s.

Many walkie-talkie and other types of radio transmitters in the 27 Mc/s band have been freely offered for sale, but these will now be banned. Anyone operating such equipment should have a licence or exemption from the G.P.O. and users in factories or on building sites of two-way radio call units would be well advised to check with their supporters that they conform, as the maximum fine is now Lacor or three months' imprisonment.

Desk Pen Set

A MODERN-LOOKING pen set, coloured in blue or green to match the latest Post Office telephone receivers, is now selling at retail stationers at 34s.

The pen holds forty times as much ink as a fountain pen and needs filling only three or four times a year. The nib does not stand in a reservoir of ink but is fed by a capillary action through a nylon filament. Various grades of nibs are available for different types of handwriting.

Meeting of the Council

The February meeting of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland took place in Belfast, the attendance being as follows:

Mr N. V. Hogan, President, in the chair, Mr T. D. Lorimer, Vice-President, Messrs H. F. Bell, G. A. P. Bryan, M. M. Connor, R. N. Crawford, Niall Crowley, Thomas Kenny, John Love, C. H. Nicholson, W. H. O'Donnell, H. W. Robinson, C. F. Smith, A. J. Spain, D. H. Templeton, A. W. Warnock and F. C. Winkelmann, with the Secretary, the Joint Secretary and Assistant Secretary.

Apologies for absence were submitted from Messrs D. S. A. Carroll and W. J. Johnston.

Fellowship

The following, who had been continuously in practice for five years, were elected to fellowship:

Carney, John A., Dublin. May, Nigel W. M., Belfast.

Practice

The following were admitted to practice:

Boyd, Barrett, J. J., F.C.A., Surrey. Elliott, Brian, F.C.A., Geneva. Holland, J. N., A.C.A., Dublin. Mulholland, J. E., A.C.A., Belfast. Scott, J. E., A.C.A., Belfast.

It was noted that the following had ceased to practise:

Andison, Harry, F.C.A., Belfast. Keenar, J. J., A.C.A., Dublin. Mackay, P. W., A.C.A., Dublin. Magowan, J. C., F.C.A., Dublin. Pollock John, F.C.A., Dublin.

Membership

The following candidates having completed the Institute examination were admitted to membership as associates not in practice:

Cooke, Noel S., Dublin. Lyons, Gerald D., Dublin. Wallace, Robert M., Dublin.

Deaths

Boyd, Arthur Stanley, F.C.A., Belfast, a member of Council and immediate Past-President of the Institute.

Brock, Gabriel, F.C.A., Dublin, President of the Institute in 1937-39.

Crawford, James F., F.C.A., Belfast.

Walker, Arthur Herbert, F.C.A., Dublin, member of Council of the former Society of Incorporated Accountants from 1923 to its dissolution; member of Irisk Council of the former Society from 1905 to its dissolution; President of the Irisk Branch in 1927–28 and 1936–37 and Honorary Secretary from 1905 to 1927.

In paying tribute to the late Stanley Boyd, the President said:

'I must refer to the great loss we have suffered by the death of Stanley Boyd – our friend and colleague. The loss is not only ours who worked with him on this Council but also a loss to our Institute, of which he was an outstanding President, and to the profession as a whole, in these islands. All of you knew him well, so I need not tell of his many outstanding qualities but it is right that we should record formally in the minutes of this meeting our deep appreciation of his many great services to our Institute.'

The President also paid tribute to the late Mr Gabriel Brock and Mr Arthur Herbert Walkey.

Resignation from the Council

The Council accepted with regret the resignation of Mr Michael Mark Connor, F.C.A., Dublin, who had served on the Council since 1955, and recorded their appreciation of the service rendered to the Council and the Institute by Mr Connor.

Committee

Reports were received from the following committees:

Courses; Education and Training; Examination; Finance and General Purposes; Future Plans; Investigation; Parliamentary and Law; Policy; Public Relations; Taxation.

SELECTIVE EMPLOYMENT TAX

Mr ELYSTAN MORGAN asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the approximate figure of gross revenue raised by selective employment tax since its inception.

Mr DIAMOND: The approximate gross amount paid by employers in Great Britain in selective employment tax from September 4th, 1966, to December 31st, 1967, is £1,415million.

Mr ELYSTAN MORGAN asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the approximate amount paid to manufacturers by way of selective employment premium since its inception.

Mr DIAMOND: The approximate amount paid to manufacturers in Great Britain in selective employment tax premium from September 4th, 1966, to December 31st, 1967, is £597 million. This consists of £458 million refund and £139 million additional payments.

Hansard, February 12th, 1968. Written answers, col. 283.

DECIMAL CURRENCY

Mr G. CAMPBELL asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the compensation which will have to be paid to the manufacturers and owners of automatic vending machines, parking meters and other meters, accounting machines, cash registers and other business machines as a result of the conversion made necessary by the change to the new decimal currency.

Mr Harold Lever: The Government have said that compensation as a general principle is not acceptable. It is for the Decimal Currency Board to receive and consider representations for compensation in special circumstances. The Government will consider any recommendations the Board mav make.

ESTATE DUTY

MR HILEY asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing an estate duty savings scheme, enabling an individual to purchase estate duty certificates of £100, £1,000, or other suitable denominations, the aggregate value of which in any particular case would be credited against the contingent liability to estate duty arising on his death, the sum so saved being itself exempt from estate duty, capital gains tax and any other form of taxation and from aggregation.

Mr Roy Jenkins: I have considered such a scheme but I am not in favour

CORPORATION TAX

MR ALISON asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what authority inspectors of tax are now assessing companies for corporation tax at 42½ per cent on profits earned after March 31st, 1968.

Mr Roy Jenkins: I assume that the hon. Member is concerned with the corporation tax charge for the financial year 1967 i.e. on profits arising in the twelve months ending on March 31st, 1968. In a statement published on November 18th last, my predecessor anounced the Government's intention to propose that the rate of corporation tax for the financial year 1967 should be fixed at 422 per cent. This proposal will come before the House in due course, but until it does there is no authority for imposing corporation tax at any rate other than the last rate fixed by Parliament i.e. 40 per cent.

Hansard, February 16th, 1968. Written answers, col. 431.

SIR C. OSBOURNE asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give in column form the internal purchasing power of the £ sterling for every year since 1945, taking 20s as the basis for the period most convenient nearest to

Mr DIAMOND: As the answer is in the form of a table of figures, I will, with permission, circulate it in the Official Report.

The table below shows the internal purchasing power of the f sterling in the years 1946 to 1967 taking its value as 20s in 1946, the nearest convenient date to 1945. The estimates are based on movements in the consumer price index from 1946 to 1966, with a provisional figure for 1967 based on the index of retail prices.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFIT AND OCCUPATIONAL PENSIONERS

People with substantial occupational pensions may no longer be able to draw unemployment benefit or receive contribution credits. This would be the effect of recommendations made in a report (H.M.S.O., price 3s 3d), to the Minister of Social Security by the National Insurance Advisory Committee published last week.

The question of unemployment benefit for occupational pensioners was referred to the Committee because of widespread and growing criticism of the payment of benefit to people who retire before the minimum national insurance retirement pension age (65 for men, 60 for women). The Committee examined this criticism carefully and have concluded that many of the occupational pensioners who claim unemployment benefit and contribution credits are not effectively in the field of employment and that the present situation constitutes a serious misuse of the national insurance scheme. They propose that there should be additional conditions for the receipt of unemployment benefit by occupational pensioners so that benefit would not be payable to those with substantial pensions unless they could first demonstrate their intention to follow regular employment.

education programme of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland to be held during next month. Both are also open to members of the kindred accountancy bodies and to non-accountants sponsored by members of the Scottish Institute.

The first course is a residential one and will be held at the University of St Andrews from April 4th to 7th. It will concentrate on the audit problems resulting from developments in computers and automatic data processing and the special techniques which are required when auditing clients computer installations. Subjects will be presented by lectures, films and case studies, and there will be ample opportunity for the exchange of views during syndicate and plenary discussions. It will be assumed that those attending will have a basic knowledge of computers - equivalent to that obtained by the Institute's introductory computer course.

The statistical sampling course, which will take place in Edinburgh, Glasgow and London on April 20th, 21st and 27th respectively, is designed to give a basic knowledge of the statistical sampling technique and to illustrate advantageous applications in the field of auditing and accounting. Among the subjects to be covered will be: sampling and the computer, the elements of sampling theory, and there will be a discussion of the case for and against statistical sampling.

Further particulars of the courses may be obtained from the Director of Post-qualifying Education, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, 27 Queen Street, Edinburgh 2.

LIVERPOOL SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The second of the Liverpool Society of Chartered Accountants' one-day tax courses will be held on March 28th, at the Royal Institution, Liverpool 2, and will deal with various aspects of tax planning.

The morning session will commence with an introduction to the subject by Mr J. F. Allan, F.C.A. There will then be group discussions on a case study, followed by consideration of questions arising from the discussions. The groups will prepare their solutions to the case study at the first afternoon session, after which Mr Allan, together with practising members of the Society, will comment on the suggested solutions. The course will conclude with Mr Allan putting forward his suggested solution and answering further questions.

The course is open to all members of the Society. Articled clerks at Final examination stage are also eligible to attend if accommodation permits which is limited to 150.

YORK CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' ANNUAL DINNER

Referring to devaluation at the recent annual dinner of the York Society of Chartered Accountants, Mr Frederick Seebohm, T.D., F.I.B., President of The Institute of Bankers, said that for the first time in over one hundred years there were now two unstable currencies - sterling and the dollar. Mr Seebohm, however, stressed his confidence in the future of sterling saying that in spite of its present weakness many countries still used it and they were longing for it to be strong again. The world, he said, needed sterling and he felt that over the next three years or so it would again recover its strength.

Among some pertinent comments on the Government and politicians, Mr Seebohm said that the 'I'm Backing Britain Campaign' and Welsh and Scottish nationalism were symptoms indicating a lack of leadership. There were, he said, people in industry who would like to enter politics but could not afford to do so. He believed that industry could make it possible for those who wish to do so to enter politics which would be parallel to 'releasing a Beeching' for five years.

SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Postponed Meeting

We have been asked to state that the proposed debate for members of the Sheffield and District Society of Chartered Accountants planned for March 28th, which was announced in our issue of February 17th, has been temporarily postponed.

LONDON INDUSTRIAL CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS' GROUP

The chairman, Mr J. Sandford Smith, F.C.A., the honorary secretary, Mr R. J. Ogle, F.C.A., and members of the London Industrial Chartered Accountants' Group, entertained Mr Arnold Weinstock, managing director of the General Electric Co Ltd, at a luncheon at the Waldorf Hotel, London on Friday of last week.

CITY DISCUSSION GROUP

The next meeting of the City Discussion Group will take the form of a joint one with the 'Balance Group' and will be held on Wednesday next, March 13th, at Williamsons Tavern, Bow Lane, Cheapside, London EC4 at 5.45 for 6 p.m. The subject for discussion will be 'Accountants' indemnity – why the increase in premiums?' Mr H. N. Kerridge, of C. T. Bowring & Muir Beddall (Home) Ltd, together with a member of the Institute will open the discussion.

manual of computer

Systems Edited by BRIAN A. MAYNARD

President of the O.E.E.C. mission to the U.S.A. on 'Integrated Data Processing and is an important breakthrough in a field of national importance. Here at last is an authoritative work of reference on computers used for data processing in the United Kingdom which succeeds in reducing a bewildering mass of unco-ordinated data and much hitherto unavailable information to a tabulated and readily assimilable form.

It is thus a valuable time-saver to all concerned with obtaining accurate basic information for unbiased decisions about computer systems - speeding up decisions, reducing the chances of wrong ones and saving the time of key staff of both potential users and the computer manufacturers.

There is, therefore, no longer any reason for wasting time and money in order to obtain factual background information which is now available at a fraction of the cost of obtaining it for oneself.

AN ESSENTIAL WORK OF REFERENCE COMBINED WITH A QUARTERLY UP-DATING SERVICE

As a result of an increase in the number of subscribers, we are pleased to announce that, as from the next quarter, it will be possible to provide a greatly improved up-dating service for the same annual subscription. In future, all amendments will be in the form of new sheets so that manual alterations will not be necessary. In addition to new systems, it is also envisaged that the descriptions of each of four main systems will be completely reprinted at least once a year to incorporate in the main body of the text such new features as may appear during the year

The features of each system are discussed in detail

ACCOUNTANCY IN FARM MANAGEMENT

I.C.I.'s Farm Advisory Service is directed towards optimising farmers' use of its agricultural products whilst improving the profitability of individual farms and farming generally. Provision of forward planning and management advice is of outstanding importance in this work and significant progress is being made in the development and application of advanced business techniques including the use of computers. An IBM 360 series computer is already in use for management accounts covering a country-wide sample of I.C.I. recorded farms and the data thus obtained is stored and analysed for use in planning and management advisory work.

A Qualified Accountant, preferably under 30 years of age, is required to lead the section which prepares farm management accounts using modern accounting methods. The duties include the functional responsibility for a team of Recorders throughout the country and for the supervision of data processing on groups of farms following account preparation. The successful candidate will join a group of young and enthusiastic graduates in our Farm Management Advisory Team and will be involved in the exciting and rapidly developing field of farm recording and planning systems. He will, from time to time, be required to visit individual farmers on recording and management accountancy aspects of the Farm Advisory Service.

Prospects exist for the Accountant who performs these tasks really well to advance in industrial management accountancy within the Division.

ACCOUNTANTS OR GRADUATES

Around £4,000 p.a.

An engineering company of international repute in South London wishes to recruit two executives responsible to the Group Financial Controller as follows:

Chief Financial Accountant

A Chartered Accountant is required for this newly-created post. Procedures to be covered include payroll, cash, purchase, sale and nominal ledgers, capital expenditure control, consolidation and review of information from subsidiaries and control of taxation. The staff of these departments amount to about 80. The work covers a wide range of subjects arising from the interpretation of management reports and calls for the exercise of considerable personal initiative.

Systems and Audit Manager

A qualified accountant or graduate is required to develop this newly-created post occasioned by the increasing complexity and diversity of activities. His tasks are to review, formulate and implement improved accounting and administrative procedures and techniques in the Group's factories and Head Office.

The computerisation of the company's manufacturing procedures has accentuated the need to change established systems and introduce improved standard costing and control methods. He will work closely with an advanced but still developing computer installation and will have a small select staff.

He must have experience and appreciation of up-to-date systems and computer developments, have the ability to think constructively and determination to ensure that management has reliable and appropriate information on profit improvement and cost reduction opportunities. Prospects for advancement in these and allied areas are excellent.

Applicants, preferably in their mid-thirties, who feel they have the right qualities for these challenging opportunities should forward brief particulars to Box AO 629.

Please state briefly, in writing, how each reculrement is met. Nothing will be disclosed, unless you give permission after a confidential interview.

Accountancy in Government Service

During 1968 a number of openings will arise for both young (including recently qualified) and more experienced accountants to take up careers in the Home Civil Service. For both levels of entry the qualification of Chartered or Certified Accountant is essential.

Their work will be varied, covering the full range of financial and cost accounting, together with some applications of up-to-date management accounting techniques in those Government departments which have contacts with the industrial and commercial world. They will have an important part in the control of Government expenditure. The posts are located mainly in London, Manchester, Liverpool, Birmingham, Cardiff, Newcastle, Glasgow and

For the limited number of openings in this grade, candidates must have broadly based professional experience in order that they may take on senior responsibilities of complexity that call for initiative and the ability to present and argue a case. They must be at least 30 and normally under 45 years of age.

Salaries (Inner London) will be on the scale £1,807 to £2,444; for candidates of 35 or over with special qualifications or experience, starting salaries may be above the minimum. Noncontributory pension scheme. Reference 590/J/1A

ACCOUNTANTS

The professional experience of candidates for this level of entry will be judged in relation to their age, but they must be fully conversant with modern financial and cost accounting techniques and practice. The lower age limit is 23.

Starting salaries (Inner London) will range from £1,255 at 23 to £1,738 at 34 and over; appointment to the grade of Senior Accountant (see above) could come in two years. Non-contributory pension scheme. Reference 590/J/2A

Promotion prospects for both the above grades are good to posts with salaries up to £3,050. There are also a number of higher posts carrying salaries up to £3,775 and above. Salaries under review and increases likely to operate from 1st January 1968.

Fuller details of all the appointments and a booklet outlining the work of accountants in the Government service may be obtained by writing to the Civil Service Commission, 23 Savile Row, London W.1, quoting the appropriate reference. Closing date 28th March 1968.

The service A L Factors offers you is being used by a wide range of expanding companies which previously suffered from "growing pains". A L Factors, associated with an old established merchant bank, is helping many companies to make better use of their assets by providing immediate finance against sales and complete bad debt protection.

They also relieve companies of all the headaches of sales ledger administration and collection work. Companies are able to operate on a cash-on-delivery basis yet their customers can still take normal trade credit.

The benefits of this service are widespread, and companies throughout the country are achieving greater turnover, reduced overheads and larger profits through using A L Factors. The cost of this comprehensive service is surprisingly low and although we do not suggest it is the answer to every company's problems, we do suggest it is worth investigating. Write or telephone either Mr. S. Minoprio or Mr. B. Jenkins for more information on how A L Factors can help you to improve profits with low cost capital for expansion. Incidentally, our clients call us ALF.

Post-qualification Training

NTIL quite recent times there were few to dispute the almost unrivalled merits of professional accountancy training for a future career in the senior echelons of management and even the boardroom. Certainly, the magic letters denoting such a qualification were seldom absent from the names on many a company's notepaper! More recently, however, and due, no doubt, to the wider economic difficulties of the nation, British management has not had a good Press.

Inevitably some of the much publicized and highly vocal criticism has rubbed off on to the traditional methods of management training. It is therefore hardly coincidental that new avenues to senior management appointments have opened up, more especially through the business schools and the technologically-based universities.

Recognizing the implications of these new developments, the major United Kingdom accountancy bodies introduced their Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services, and the English and Irish Institutes the Certificate in Management Information. These two post-qualification attainments are quite different in character. The Joint Diploma was designed for the mature and experienced accountant, to signify his proven capacity to assume a top-level appointment in management. The C.M.I., however, was in the nature of a post-graduate course intended to give the recently-qualified accountant a thorough grounding in modern management accounting and its related techniques so that he would be fitted for more-than-average progress up the management ladder.

It would be idle to pretend that either the Diploma or the Certificate has fully satisfied the expectations of the sponsoring bodies. The reasons are probably not far to seek. The former was certainly too much for the less able, while by the time the abler man had reached his fortieth birthday he had had ample opportunity to demonstrate his capacities without obtaining a further qualification.

The Certificate, however, has had to contend with different problems. It requires more than average determination and application to embark upon yet another examination course almost immediately after qualification as a member of the English or Irish Institutes. Furthermore, it may be doubted whether the full significance of recent developments in the field of management training has been brought home to the majority of newly-qualified accountants. Excellent though their training and professional examinations undoubtedly are, the accountancy bodies have openly recognized that such a training still leaves considerable gaps which the younger accountant should seek to fill as expeditiously as is practicable.

The changes now announced elsewhere in this issue in the entry requirements for the Joint Diploma are, therefore, realistic and should help popularize it by bringing it within the reach of the younger but able man. It is also logical that the Certificate examination should be co-ordinated with the Diploma and will now serve as a major step towards the senior qualification, albeit that the Certificate itself represents a very real advance in the professional equipment of the younger accountant.

Like other professional societies the accountancy bodies have had their share of criticism for allegedly falling behind the times and failing to give a lead to their members. The new statement is further evidence that the accountancy organizations are, in fact, giving such a lead. It is to be hoped that younger and more ambitious accountants will judge it to be in their best long-term interests to follow that lead.

Profitability and Growth

DESPITE their common interest in the workings of the national economy, it would be idle to pretend that the collaboration between accountants and economists, not to mention statisticians, has been particularly fruitful in terms of useful published research. Just as the average accountant has acquired some knowledge of economic principles in the course of his studies, so the economist has often devoted a similarly short period to acquiring a grasp of elementary accounting. Unfortunately, instead of serving as a bridge between the two disciplines, such brief acquaintance with each other's discipline has all too often served merely to differentiate their particular spheres of interest.

The intervention of Government in industrial and business affairs has given economists new opportunities in recent years for studying the work of the accountant. In particular, much more work is done nowadays on the analysis of published accounts. The quarterly reports from the Statistics Division of the Board of Trade are good illustrations of this work. Much of it is unsophisticated, albeit quite informative, involving little more than the classification and aggregation by industry and size of undertaking of both the balance sheets and profit and loss accounts.

A new study from the Department of Applied Economics in Cambridge suggests some interesting possibilities for future analyses of corporate accounts. Entitled Growth, Profitability and Valuation (Cambridge University Press, price 50s) the work is the joint product of two economists, Mr A. SINGH and Mr G. WHITTINGTON, aided by a computer specialist, Mr

H. T. Burley. Their purpose is to verify the existence of any relationships between size and profitability, the rate of growth and size of business undertakings, as well as the causal relationship, if any.

The work is primarily statistical in character; correlation analysis is used largely to establish and measure the degree of association between variables relating to growth and size of the undertaking, while regression analysis is used to assess the degree of causal associations. Rightly so, a good deal of the text is given over to the deficiencies of the data, as well as a discussion of the statistical measures employed. The authors make all the obvious and familiar criticisms of published accounts and the problems they pose for the analyst - in particular, uncertain valuations of stock and work in progress, variability of valuation for fixed assets, of investments both trade and portfolio, as well as the inadequate breakdown of profit and loss account entries. To quote the authors, 'the basic accounting data are unsatisfactory, particularly as regards asset valuation'.

On the other hand they say 'although accounting information is imperfect it is, in many respects, the best information available to management and (more so) to shareholders'. While conceding these defects and their importance for statistical analysis, the authors do not consider that the limitations of the basic data vitiate such analysis, for 'the most important feature of accounting valuation conventions is that they all work in the same direction, i.e. it is considered almost criminal to overvalue and prudent to undervalue'.

The basic financial data are derived from the standardized series of annual accounts of each quoted company prepared by the Board of Trade for the period 1948-60. Figures relating to the valuation on the Stock Exchange of the company's share capital is derived from Moodies' cards. The accounts analysed relate to four industries, clothing and footwear, food, tobacco, together with a grouping described as ship-building and non-electrical engineering. They include 364 companies, for each of which data are available throughout the entire period under review.

The significance of the various findings from these detailed analyses is highly variable; some are almost self-evident, others more striking. In respect of growth rates there is some evidence to suggest that the average growth rate is not related to size of the firm, although the degree of variability in growth rates for different sizes of firm tends to decrease as the size of firm increases. This is no doubt a reflection of the tendency for larger firms to be more stable and diversified.

A division of the period 1948-60 into two halves shows that those companies with above-average profitability in the earlier period before 1954 tend to have a similar experience in the later period. On the other hand, the authors stress that while this experience may serve as a guide to investment in a portfolio of diverse companies, it cannot be a sound basis for assessing the fortunes in the future of a single company. Furthermore, such findings offer no indication as to whether the above-average results are due to good management or monopoly power, or even both. In any case, what happened in 1958–64 is not necessarily a good guide to what may happen in 1966–72.

An assessment of this compendious study must depend largely upon the particular interests of the reader. As it stands it is clearly aimed at the professional economist and statistician rather than the professional accountant. If such work is to be extended in the future, then it is to be hoped that the authors will consider its presentation for the divergent interests of these two groups.

Taxing the Company and its Members — German Answer

THE paper by Dr Heining on the German splitrate system of corporate taxation reproduced on other pages in this issue should be required reading for anyone contemplating tax reform in the United Kingdom. It is a pity that Britain's reforms of 1965 were not preceded by some comparative research on the tax systems of her European neighbours.

Whether the German corporation tax system should have been adopted is a moot point. The 1965 Finance Act was passed by a Labour Government and as the German Social Democrats and the left wing of the Christian Democrats were opposed to the German split-rate system, it could hardly be expected that a Labour Chancellor and his advisers would be attracted to it.

The essence of the German split-rate system is that it is biased in favour of distributions. Undistributed profit is taxed at 51 per cent, distributed profit at 15 per cent. The lower rate on distributed profit takes cognizance of the fact, which the British system does not, that distributions are to be taxed again in the hands of the shareholder.

Great play was made in the Parliamentary debates of 1965 about the way in which the low level of the proposed British corporation tax would encourage plough-back and enhance the prospect of growth through increased industrial investment. Most British companies have since attempted to maintain dividends in a period of profit squeeze, and the combined effect of the corporation tax and witholding tax on company cash flows has been more adverse than the old two-tier profits tax and income tax on companies. Post-1965 industrial history does not show that the new tax system has encouraged plough-back; rather the reverse.
